MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIR

I am pleased to present this year’s annual report that reflects the Nathan Cummings Foundation’s accomplishments of 2006. NCF is a foundation that values and has benefited from a Board composed of both family and highly regarded professionals, each serving the philanthropic community. Our culture is diverse, multigenerational and we understand that our perception of ourselves effects how we lead in the world. I salute our President and staff who have led programmatic efforts that have generated much success and recognition over past years.

Throughout my three-year term as Chair many exciting developments have taken place on the Board and with the staff of NCF. I want to also take a moment to congratulate the following people for their valued time in which they have served the Foundation and/or will begin to contribute to supporting our efforts. Staff members Toanna Abdool and Hanna Abrams will be pursuing a Masters Degree and Law School. We were glad to welcome Sara Kay as our new Health Program Director and Leisle Lin the new Vice President for Finance and Administration. Our Arts Program Director Claudine Brown was heartily welcomed back from a sabbatical. Newly appointed board memberships include Sara Horowitz, Michael Cummings and two members from the Fourth Generation of the family Rachel and Danielle Durchslag. We are extremely grateful to Bevis Longstreth who served for eight years as the Chair of Investment Committee. He did so with great care and success. We welcome Adam Blumenthal as our new Chair of Investment. I know the Board joins me in celebrating the service and commitment demonstrated by Beatrice Mayer, my aunt and the Foundation’s first Board Chair, upon her becoming named as Trustee Emeritus.

Lastly, I am glad to welcome my colleague, Ernest Tollerson as Chair of the Board. I am confident that his leadership and vision will further our mission as a progressive foundation deeply committed to social and economic justice.

Adam Cummings, Chair
President’s Report

2006 brought the promise of increasing possibilities for social change, where NCF grantees and partners were at the forefront of facilitating progressive reform. Many NCF projects and activities received real recognition in the media, in Washington D.C. and in the states, for their innovative approaches and impact. In all our work, we have sought to develop new and more effective approaches to change the public policy landscape to better reflect our current social, political, economic and cultural realities. We have vigorously reassessed past strategies and directions and have consequently sought approaches that emphasize broader integrated visions rather than narrow issue silos, possibilities rather than limits and restraints, assets rather than liabilities, empowerment rather than victimhood, and aspirations rather than complaints.

The Health Program strongly focused on state and local communities, funding state advocacy groups working to promote access to quality, affordable healthcare for all. These efforts have been rewarded by recent breakthroughs in Massachusetts, Illinois, Maine, Vermont, and California. The Prescription Litigation Project, which NCF helped start, has worked hard to lower the price of prescription drugs through litigation, resulting in nearly $4 billion dollars in savings on purchases this year alone. On the national level, the Foundation helped found and support the Herndon Alliance, a coalition of over sixty minority, faith, advocacy, labor and provider organizations, developing strategic policy initiatives to expand access to quality, affordable healthcare nationally for all.

NCF’s health grantees and partners are working hard to harness a pervasive and growing sense that our existing health system is broken, directing efforts toward the creation of effective state and local solutions that will lead to a national response. Strategic alliances, creative policy development and long-term institution building all will remain critical to creating an environment in which the successes that are beginning to emerge from the states can be extended more broadly.

The Jewish Life and Values Program has become a key leader in building the fields of Jewish service and social justice. The Foundation’s early support of innovative Jewish social justice initiatives has – in a relatively short period of time – changed the landscape for emerging generations of Jews. NCF’s work to promote Jewish service garnered particular attention this past year, culminating in a conference that brought together practitioners of Jewish service, funders and community leaders, all seeking to envision how to make Jewish service central to American Jewish Life and to bring it to scale.

NCF has been in the vanguard of promoting Congregation Based Community Organizing (CBCO), a dynamic process of training, reflection, one-on-one conversations, and house meetings, leading congregations to identify issues of social concern and engage in addressing them. Congregations involved in CBCO played a crucial role in Massachusetts’s recent health care reform.
For these efforts, the Jewish Life and Values Program Director was recognized again, for the second year in a row, as one of the fifty most influential Jews in the U.S. by The Jewish Daily Forward.

In 2006, the Environment program continued its commitment to searching for solutions to the grave issues of the climate crisis and environmental degradation by funding innovative work to address these challenges in a more effective way. One example that has garnered real media and political attention is the Apollo Alliance (an Environment, Health, and Interprogram effort). Senator Clinton recently acknowledged Apollo for its leadership in challenging the nation to become energy independent while addressing climate change and creating millions of well-paying, clean energy jobs.

Environment, Health, and Interprogram have also maintained their ongoing support of the Strategic Values Project, which is continuing its groundbreaking work to quantify the social values of Americans and to use this research to develop strategic initiatives that advance environmental sustainability, community health and social justice perspectives. Their findings are currently being used by organizations such as Earthjustice, the country’s largest non-profit litigation firm to broaden the base of public support for environmental sustainability; by the California Alliance, a coalition of twenty-five state social and economic justice organizations working to expand the community benefits movement, to address community health and environmental needs; by the Center for American Progress for its efforts to shape the public agenda on global warming preparedness; and by the Herndon Alliance on national healthcare reform.

Senator Obama has recognized the important work of the NCF grantee, the Center for American Progress and its initiative, “Health Care for Hybrids,” which seeks to provide incentives to the auto industry to accelerate efforts to develop more energy-efficient vehicles that will lessen our dependence on oil. Many organizations supported by the Environment program are noted for their willingness to think beyond traditional approaches. Their work seeks to achieve both concrete accomplishments in the short-term and to change the political landscape in the long-term so that we can effectively meet the tremendous challenges we face.

The Contemplative Practice Program is reviewing the past fifteen years of the Foundation’s work in this area. This overview will seek to measure contemplative practice’s effects on social and environmental justice efforts and whether these practices have fostered any significant breakthrough in thinking, creativity, and program results. It is also hoped that this research will lay out the beginnings of new ways of seeing and doing. At the core of this project is Albert Einstein's insight that "the significant problems we face cannot be solved at the same level of thinking we were at when we created them."

The Arts and Culture Program continued to support cultural organizations that have the ability to educate and advocate for healthy and sustainable communities, and that demand accountability of those who violate the rights and wellbeing of others. 2006 marked the fourth full year that NCF has been making grants in the area of art and social justice and the field has grown at a steady pace. Universities, theater groups, dance companies and media arts groups are training a new generation of artists, activists, and engaged community members, imparting in them needed skills to combine artistic practice with community organizing, leadership development, and effective story-telling techniques. The Universities that have been supported by the Arts and Culture program have brokered powerful and effective partnerships with their communities. Their efforts have included the work of approximately 1,500 students, 75 partnering institutions and 2,500 community members, all working hard to support their belief that the world needs healing and that the arts can be an instrument for change.

In addition, the Arts program, in collaboration with Interprogram, made several grants in 2006 to help maintain important cultural organizations and communities affected by Hurricane Katrina. Interprogram also worked with the Foundation’s other programs to support several efforts in the Gulf Coast region, such as the rebuilding of the devastated community of Moss Point, Mississippi; the strengthening of local community development banks and credit unions; and helping to create innovative policy solutions concerning hurricane preparedness and reconstruction in the wake of Katrina. The Foundation held its 2006 Board retreat in New Orleans in order to assess and experience the situation in person. Several Board members, associates, and staff volunteered to do clean up work while there. The Foundation is committed in the coming years to continuing its support of the long-term sustainable rebuilding effort of the Gulf Coast.

The Foundation encouraged the accountability of corporations through its leadership activities as an engaged shareholder. The Foundation’s shareholder activities work consists primarily of actively voting its proxies, filing shareholder resolutions and working with investor coalitions, such as the Investor Network on Climate Risk (INCR) and the United Nations Principles for Responsible Investment (UNPRI), which are backed by trillions of dollars of assets. The Foundation has been increasingly successful in obtaining the support of the proxy voting advisory firms such as Proxy Governance and Institutional Shareholder Services. Since the passage of the Foundation’s new Shareholder Activity Guidelines in 2002, NCF has filed over 35 resolutions with more than 20 different companies. These resolutions concern issues of long-term shareholder value and NCF’s mission, and have addressed political contributions, healthcare, energy efficiency and climate change. Through these efforts, the Foundation has been influential in shifting corporate approaches to climate change, energy efficiency and greenhouse gas emissions.

This past year the Foundation began its scheduled review of its programmatic guidelines. This process will continue through 2007, and is scheduled for completion in early 2008. The Board of the Nathan Cummings Foundation has begun generational succession as a second member of the Cummings’ family’s fourth generation was elected as a trustee. In addition, Beatrice Mayer, the daughter of Nathan Cummings and one of the Foundation’s founding Board members, was recently recognized by the Board and elected as Trustee Emeritus. Our deepest gratitude goes out to Buddy for her leadership, mentorship, and many years of exceptional and distinguished service to the Foundation and the communities it supports.
All these accomplishments would not be possible without the exceptional efforts of our Board and Associates, our dedicated and innovative staff and our many partners. I thank them for their consistent, high quality efforts and willingness to take real risks. We look forward in the coming years ahead to continuing the Foundation’s legacy of serving as a real force for social change.

INTRODUCTION

2006 marked our 4th full year of making grants in the area of art and social justice and the field is growing. Universities, theater groups, dance companies and media arts groups are training artists, activists, and community members. They are imparting skills that combine artistic practice with community organizing, leadership development, and effective storytelling techniques. Concurrently, a multi-generational collective of artists and community members believe that the world needs healing and that the arts can be an instrument for change. These individuals have been attracted to summer institutes, weekend training programs, conferences and degree-granting programs that can provide them with the tools that will enable them to harness the transformative power of art.

Artists of all ages have become students, mentors and master teachers as they build the field of community-based arts. Their efforts have yielded a body of hard copy publications that document the history and salient work in this field. They have created on-line resources that make it easier for teachers and students to learn and engage in the work. Additionally, affordable media facilitates have contributed to the growth of a fully participatory community that has the capacity to document the lives and struggles of its members while facilitating activism that leads to change.

The Arts and Culture Program continues to target cultural communities that have the ability to educate and advocate for a healthy and sustainable community by creating works which encourage our collective productivity and demand accountability of those who violate the rights and well-being of others. Our grantees view themselves as citizen/artists who document and articulate the concerns of their times and work collectively with community members and other artists to achieve social and economic justice. We support and sustain this community in the following ways:

Developing and strengthening leadership by:

• Strengthening the roles that established and young artists play in communities by supporting universities training young artists to work with communities in need;

• Creating opportunities for more artists and community residents to learn new skills and processes by supporting training programs at arts organizations that have a history of effective practice in community engagements;

• Encouraging artists to learn first-hand about social movements that effect local and national constituents by supporting social justice organizations that recognize the value of working with artists to more effectively advance their issues; and
• Supporting the development of coalitions both within and across disciplines in an effort to stimulate peer learning and to more broadly disseminate positive strategies and ideas.

Supporting the dissemination of research and information that informs the work of the field:
• Educating targeted constituents and getting our message out to a broad segment of the arts community by supporting service organizations that convene and facilitate the work of artists working in diverse communities.

• Supporting the publication of curriculum, documentary films, websites, hard copy and web based publications that inform the work of the field.

Supporting policy research, litigation and advocacy that results in an environment where creators and private citizens can engage in their work without undue censorship or exploitative private practices that alienate their voices.
• Supporting research that identifies the needs of specific cohorts, the organizations that are doing the work, possible collaborators or partners and strategies for maximizing the impact of the work.

• Supporting studies that document the impact of public policies and regulations and propose alternative policies that will lead to greater accountability, efficiency and accessibility to benefits by the broadest based constituency.

GOAL
To support artistic practices, programs and policies that encourage cross-cultural and multidisciplinary collaborations, and give voice to the issues and experiences of underrepresented communities, in order to build a stronger society.

OBJECTIVE I:
To support arts and cultural organizations partnering with community groups that engage in responsive processes, collective problem solving, cross-cultural initiatives or the education of a broader public about social justice issues and shared community concerns.

Strategy 1: THE ART
To identify, support and document key projects that involve cultural institutions working collaboratively with multigenerational, multiethnic, multidisciplinary and/or broad geographic communities in response to economic and social justice issues articulated by those communities.

Arts grantees are stimulating cross-cultural conversations around issues pertaining to race, ethnicity, historical inequities, and the on-going quest of under-represented groups for social and economic justice. They are collaborating with organizations seeking to expand their reach and get their messages out to more diverse constituencies.
The Mexican Fine Art Center Museum (PAG) chose to engage Chicago’s African American community in a conversation concerning their shared roots. The exhibition The African Presence in Mexico depicts the story, and examines the issues of people of African descent in Mexico. The exhibition has several additional venues. The National Building Museum (PAG) (with support from Environment and Interprogram) has created the exhibition The Green House: New Directions in Sustainable Architecture and Design to explore the field of green residential design as it reaches a turning point of greater acceptance by home builders and the general public. The Print Making Council of New Jersey’s (PAG) exhibition Unstitched, Unbound: Imprints for Change is an exhibition of artists’ books that explore forms of resistance to injustice and advocates for social change.

The skills needed for effective community engagement are being honed in universities across the nation. We have supported degree granting programs addressing art and community building, media and communications training programs and community theater training projects. The New York Foundation for the Arts’ Active Citizen Project is organizing youth and young adults who articulate their concerns about the state of the nation through graphic design, film and video, web-site design and performing arts (with support from Interprogram). Temple University’s Tyler School of the Arts - Community Arts Program (with support from Jewish Life), offers a program that combines artistic disciplines with community organizing skills. They continued to work with Philadelphia’s Jewish, Palestinian and Latino communities. 1+1+1=ONE continued its work concerning young women’s issues in society by editing and touring its performance piece We’ve Got Issues and creating a leadership training program for young women that incorporates writing, spoken word and theater skills.

Appalshop, Inc is working with Human Rights Watch, and Holler 2 the Hood, a hip hop radio program to create theater involving prisoners, prison employees, family members, and activists from three communities. The play was broadcast on 100 radio stations nationally. The Association of Joint Labor/Management Educational Programs (PAG) (with support from Interprogram) expanded its writing program for workers who recount their experiences in a variety of industries across the nation. The Ella Baker Center for Human Rights in California (with support from Interprogram) continued its work using spoken word and youth made media as tools for social engagement.

In New Orleans the Arts and Culture Program targeted organizations that had the ability to reach larger constituencies and whose work was in keeping with our guidelines (with support from Interprogram). The Louisiana Cultural Economy Foundation, Inc. is supporting individual artists, artists businesses, as well arts institutions throughout New Orleans. Their goal is to get artists back into the city and to put them to work. The New Orleans Jazz Orchestra, (NOJO) under the leadership of Julian Mayfield, is working to preserve the music of the region and tours local musicians throughout the country. NOJO is assessing the holdings of significant jazz ephemera in public and private collections. They are determining the condition of these surviving materials and ascertaining future conservation needs.
Xavier University of Louisiana is a grantee university that has a community arts program for its undergraduate students. All of our university grantees met in New Orleans to share practices and to brainstorm about rebuilding the community arts infrastructure in New Orleans. Xavier’s Community Arts Partnership (with project support from Interprogram) suffered a temporary hiatus in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. However, students who have been trained to use art as a tool for community organizing have proven to be particularly useful in two instances. They have worked with community-based organizations to provide services to many of the returning youth; and the faculty and staff have been an asset in neighborhoods that are engaged in planning and rebuilding. New York University’s two programs, the Grassroots Performance Project and the Digital Storytelling and Community: An Exploration of Home both offered their students residencies in New Orleans during the school year. The focus of a great deal of this work was the use of digital media to allow students and community members to bear witness to the devastation and the recovery in the Mississippi Delta.

The National Performance Network, a national arts service organization that is headquartered in New Orleans received a Presidential Authority Grant to create a virtual office that would accommodate a staff that was working in ten different states.

Theater companies have assumed a leadership role in the area of art and social justice. The Fiji Theater Company, Inc. is working in communities around issues of concern to audiences with competing and/or oppositional interests. Their target audiences for the development of recent works have been homeless teens in the Northwest, children of war in the nation’s capital and new immigrants in the twin cities and on the west coast. Cornerstone Theater Company’s Cornerstone Institute is a summer residency program where artists and community members of all ages learn Cornerstone’s theater-making techniques. Los Illegal, the company’s newest project, is a production in the company's Justice Cycle, which is a multi-year sequence of plays investigating how laws shape and disrupt communities in contemporary American society. Los Illegals addresses one of the most urgent and divisive issues of our time: illegal immigration. The Hip Hop Theatre Junction is increasing the number of workshops, festivals and performances it offers throughout the country and will target university audiences for one-person performances that require minimal staging. Pangea World Theater is a multi-ethnic theater company that continues to build new works around the shared values and experiences of diverse peoples.

The Brotherhood/Sister Sol’s Lyrical Circle writing program engages youth in social issues; and its Community Museum, is a visual arts and social justice program. Curriculum based on these programs is being developed and broadly disseminated. The organization’s leaders are using the curriculum to train youth workers and educators. Students have learned artistic and organizing skills and become advocates for social change in their families, schools, and communities as well as partners with students in other countries. Bread and Roses Cultural Project, Inc. is institutionalizing its unseenamerica program, a photography and writing program for workers that has been requested by low-wage laborers throughout the country.

The International Coalition of Historic Site Museums of Conscience (with project support from Interprogram) consists of historic sites that foster remembrance, reconciliation and accountability. The coalition is building the capacity of American sites of conscience and is concentrating on building a network of Native American sites. The International Museum of Women (with project support from Interprogram) has successfully launched its first online exhibit, Imagining Ourselves. Their research has indicated that this exhibition needs to remain up for a longer period if the museum is to ascertain how viewers evolve from learners to activists. The museum is working to increase its constituency and better market its catalogues and programs.

In early November, California College of the Arts (PAG) held a convening for university faculty, students and community partners engaged in work that has evolved from the creation of degree-granting programs in art and social justice. All of our university grantees, as well as others participated. Our grant provided scholarships for the participation of students and community members.

The Bay Area Video Coalition, Inc. (BAVC) offers technology services to youth, community members and media artists (with project support from Interprogram). Additionally, many award-winning documentary films examining issues of social and economic justice were made with the assistance of BAVC’s technical services. The Global Action Project (GAP) and Scribe Video Center, Inc have initiated media institutes for social justice youth organizers, youth media educators and youth development practitioners.

Strategy 3: THE MESSAGE
To develop and support a communications strategy that includes the publication and dissemination of research that substantiates the importance of the arts in influencing social change; and the dissemination of information about collaborative projects that lead to effective public education as well as social and political action.

We continue to support documentary films that provide a context for contemporary social issues; informational websites that make pertinent information available to an international audience and media projects that have the ability to reach regional and national audiences. The American Indian Artists, Inc. is expanding its comprehensive database of registered Native American Artists and promoting networking and information-sharing in the field. Arts Engine, Inc. takes its Independent Producers Outreach Toolkit Training Tour, to media makers throughout the country so that they can learn new means of distributing their films and develop relationships with like-minded nonprofits. The New School University, Eugene Lang College’s The American Project: The 51st (dream) State is a project that was developed from a series of community sings. Cast and community members sang American folk, popular, traditional and patriotic songs and discussed their relationships to the music. The resulting production toured throughout the country.
The Fund for Independent Publishing, The New Press, (with support from Interprogram) continues to be a leading publisher of progressive books and curriculum. The Fund is developing two book projects, Censorship in Camouflage and The People’s Art History of the United States. LTSC Community Development Corporation (with support from Interprogram) is documenting and preserving the cultural legacy of early Asian American artists/activists. Talking Eyes Media, Inc. is strengthening the message of its book and exhibition by creating Denied: The Crisis of the Uninsured, a documentary film that uses personal stories to illustrate the plight of the uninsured (with support from Health and Interprogram). Video Action, Inc. is completing a documentary film and a public education campaign that revisits the voting rights and civil rights legislations of the 1960s with young people who have taken Civil Rights tours of the rural South.

Link Media, Inc.’s Chat the Planet (with support from Interprogram and Jewish Life and Values) developed programming around a mediated discourse between American, Israeli and Iraqi youth last year. They are continuing this work, by focusing on what it means to be young and Jewish during times of war. Art in the Public Interest’s on-line resource the Community Arts Network (CAN) has become an extremely significant voice in the field of community arts and a hub for communication, documentation and theoretical writing about community-based art. Over the past twelve months, usage has increased to 45,000 visitors a month, the Reading Room now contains 400 items, thirty-nine new works have been commissioned, 506 members regularly post messages, 1,880 individuals subscribe to the daily newsletter and the staff have spoken at conferences throughout the country. The Community Arts Network website has proven to be a most effective tool for educating artists and cultural workers across the globe.

Art 21, Inc. continues to be an innovator in the production and broad dissemination of messages about the roles of artists in contemporary society as agents provocateur, reconnoiters, image capturers and visionaries who see and create alternative universes. Art 21 brings the messages of contemporary art to a broad and diverse audience through it television programs, website, curriculum, hardcopy publications and community screenings. Art 21’s community engagement model is the most successful outreach strategy in the cultural community.

The exhibitions that have been held at the Nathan Cummings Foundation provide our visiting public with a concrete example of art and social justice and it has helped to create a supportive community of funders, artists and visitors who share our values. New York University’s (PAG) Tisch School for the Arts produced the exhibition, Engulfed by Katrina. This exhibition examined the effects of Hurricane Katrina in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas. The photographs gave us a glimpse of those communities before and after the storm. The exhibition opened at New York University in late October. The Creative Capital Foundation (PAG) partnered with us to present the work of many of the path-breaking artists who have received their support for innovative practices. The League of Young Voters Education Fund created an arts-based civic curriculum that their partners throughout the country are using.
Strategy 4: CONVENINGS
To convene artists and arts administrators to foster information exchange, coalition building, the development of collective strategies as well as to provide direct support.

The arts and culture community is organized around disciplines, (i.e. visual arts, theater, music); geography (regional service organizations); philosophy (social justice language in their missions) and ethnicity (first voice, immigrant or culturally specific organizations). Some of these communities are just emerging as a presence in the larger community, while others are older and better established. Our grantees represent emerging voice institutions as well as established and venerable institutions whose work may affect an entire field.

Though the internet has facilitated the growth of social justice communities, convenings have proven to be an essential tool for vetting new ideas, developing a shared vocabulary, learning skills from one another, brokering partnerships and identifying common goals and strategies. It is through convening that true communities are built. The Arab Community Center for Economic and Social Services brought together a national meeting to form partnerships and build its residency touring performances program. The Theatre Communications Group, Inc. continues its work with theaters of color and has used its annual conference to bring in speakers who raise issues of art and social justice. The National Performance Network, Inc. supports community engagements around social issues, the documentation of these efforts, regional meetings and the mentoring of new social justice leaders in the performing arts. The Creative Capital Foundation continues to support experimental arts projects that address issues of social and economic justice, convenes its artists and provides them with technical assistance.

Philadelphia Mural Arts Advocates will bring together groups from around the country in 2007 to discuss arts programs for the incarcerated. The Lower Manhattan Cultural Council, Inc. (PAG) convened its second in a series of conferences called What Comes After: Cities, Art and Recovery. These conferences have examined the contributions of artists and arts activity in rebuilding cities devastated by violence. The University of Massachusetts Foundation (PAG), New World Theater’s, Intersection IV conference examined new works and practices of politically engaged artists of color. UBW, Inc. (Urban Bush Women) built on the success of its first New York based Summer Institute where choreographers and dancers of all ages learn skills related to community-building, undoing racism, and civic engagement.

Contributing to programmatic content at annual meetings is a key strategy for building the field of art and social justice practitioners. Alternate Roots, Inc. may be the nation’s oldest art and social justice organization. Its mission is as follows: “To support the creation and presentation of original art which is rooted in a particular community of place, tradition or spirit. As cultural workers we strive to be allies in the elimination of all forms of oppression. ROOTS is committed to social and economic justice and the protection of the natural world and addresses these concerns through its programs and services.” For more than thirty years, Alternate Roots has organized and convened artists/activists from the rural south; and commissioned, produced and evaluated works that are created by migrant workers on farms, youth in small American towns, and prisoners collaborating with prison guards. ROOTS sustains its work in communities that have minimal funding infrastructures.

Grantmakers in the Arts (GIA) (PAG) in implementing its strategic plan, continues to feature artists, researchers and funders working in the area of art and social justice on their annual conference program. GIA sessions have examined: Community Building Potential of the Arts, Cultural Organizing, Grass Roots Advocacy and Public Policy, Art and Activism and Community-Based Arts Integration in New Orleans. There was also a session where our university grantees introduced the funding community to their newly published casebook.

OBJECTIVE II:
To defend against adverse public, private and corporate policies, art censorship and other challenges to the wellbeing of the non-profit cultural community.

Strategy 1: POLICY
To defend against and support policy organizations that facilitate discussion between policymakers and grassroots practitioners and develop policy that is informed by research as well as evolving practices within the impacted communities.

Over the course of the past decade, the Nathan Cummings Foundation has been one of the few foundations to continuously support the emerging field of arts policy. Organizations have died, merged and restructured and NCF has stayed the course. The big policy issues in 2006 included: government intervention in privately funded activities; media regulations and media consolidation; fair-use and other copyright issues, civic participation and health care for artists and other at-risk populations.

The Agape Foundation’s Third World Majority’s Media Justice Arts and Policy Initiative, connected grassroots organizing community groups with the media justice movement. The Center for Civic Participation (PAG) integrated arts and culture into the democracy building movement through the cross-pollination of information, contacts and strategies (with support from Interprogram); and the National Center for the Preservation of Democracy (with support from Interprogram) has created a national youth media project that explores contemporary dilemmas of democracy identified and produced by youth across the country. The Future of Music Coalition, Inc. (with support from Interprogram) created an artists research council that collected data, engaged in outreach and developed publications. We have also renewed our support (with support from Interprogram) for the William J. Brennan Center for Justice, Inc. (PAG). We supported the Center’s earlier efforts to litigate against the implementation of regulations that would allow the federal government to restrict the uses of privately raised funds. After having won in the lower courts in the Dobbins Case, the Center litigated the government’s appeal. The case will be appealed in the U.S. Supreme Court, or in the alternative, it may be remanded to the lower courts.
Public policy initiatives can shape the environment that artists and other creators exist in. In a hostile environment creativity and innovation suffer. Leveraging Investments in Creativity (LINC) was created in response to an NCF supported study that revealed that the majority of artists in this country struggle to meet the demands of their chosen disciplines because the systems and resources available to them are woefully deficient. In a healthy environment, creators are able to work with fewer impediments. Leveraging Investments in Creativity’s National Artists’ Insurance Initiative (with Health) is an effort to compile and disseminate information about quality health coverage to artists. Their goal is to implement local plans for health care and coverage in specific communities by creating model programs and supporting best practices.

Strategies 2 and 3: CORPORATE ACCOUNTABILITY/COMMUNICATIONS

To support communications strategies, including convenings, research, the development of web pages as well as hard copy publications that foster access, encourage the exchange of ideas and educate the field about the state of the arts and the implications of policy decisions for the arts community.

In 2006, our cultural policy grants related to issues that affect all of the foundation’s program areas. WGBH Educational Foundation and the Educational Broadcasting Corporation’s NOW on PBS connect the dots between policymakers and the corporate community (with support from all programs). The Independent Media Institute - Alternet continues to produce its daily, on-line progressive news magazine that reaches hundreds of thousands of readers each day.

The media policy field is rapidly growing and represents a broad range of issues that affect all of the citizens in the nation. Accordingly, we are supporting National Video Resources Inc./Grantmakers in Film and Media, the membership organization that monitors these issues for the field. Additionally, The Free Press’ (PAG) 2007 National Conference for Media Reform (with project support from Interprogram) serves as a forum for the discussion of solutions to the problems of media. The 2007 conference brought together activists, media creators, academics and policymakers to provide them with skills to increase their effectiveness; provide them with networking opportunities; facilitate discussion of policy initiatives and action plans and generate the resources, inspiration and commitment to implement these plans.

The Lost Art of Tea Tossing is a multi-formatted, nonpartisan documentary film project that examines and champions the citizens’ effort to mandate public funding for elections in the United States. Habitat Media explores the systemic co-mingling of moneyed interests, lobbyists, government and their impacts on our democracy. Short versions of the film will be used in curricula produced for middle school, high school and college students. There will be a feature-length film for theatrical release in 2008 and short versions for distribution to a national network of grassroots citizen groups in 2007.
NEXT STEPS
The Arts and Culture Program has affirmed that art and social change work involves artists, institutions of all types and community members working together. New models for social change and more in depth, long standing partnerships will guarantee more sustained outcomes. Training in both formal and informal venues can provide a variety of individuals with the skills that will be needed for them to become effective artists, organizers and leaders in the twenty-first century. Videos, films, informative web sites, publications, curricula as well as convenings where leaders in the field share research and practices will continue to foster the growth of individual practitioners.

Effective cross-referencing will be a valuable tool for the growth of the fields of community arts and art and social justice. Visual artists convening with performing artists who are working with media artists and community partners can broaden the scope and scale of the work and successfully secure new audiences. Social service providers, cultural institutions, advocacy groups and think tanks are important partners in this work. Most importantly, our grantees are pioneering delivery systems that have the ability to expand this community and heighten the impact of social campaigns in all disciplines.

High and low tech information delivery systems will allow the field to grow across generations. One goal is to learn more about the activist behaviors of members of on-line communities and the potential for more participatory on-line engagement. Additionally, the power of radio and on-line media have not been adequately exploited. Our grantees want to explore and document the roles that “linked” sites can play in moving a message; and they want to have information available that can be transmitted on new platforms, including; i-phones, pc3 players, and streamed video on the internet.

This community is just beginning to realize its potential; and funders are beginning to realize the power of this work to foster and create change. In order for this movement to have real currency, the foundation can help in the following areas: 1) strengthening the skills of emerging and existing leaders; 2) marketing, promoting and distributing research that validates the work and documenting successful models; 3) creating, mastering and sharing new delivery systems that will allow field to increase its reach; 4) creating additional tools that facilitate the replication of the work; and 5) institutionalizing the services that are being provided for practitioners.

Environment Program

INTRODUCTION

“Because if we acknowledge candidly that what we need to do is beyond the limits of our current political capacities, that really is just another way of saying that we have to urgently expand the limits of what is politically possible.”

Al Gore, September 18, 2006

Mr. Gore made this critically important point in a recent address on solutions to the climate crisis. The question is, how do we expand those limits, and how do we do it urgently? These are the central questions that Environment Program grantees are grappling with – because given what we’re up against, from global warming to mass species extinction, it is no longer enough to think in terms of isolated problems and issues. Instead we have to learn to solve for pattern, the phrase author Wendell Berry coined to refer to solutions that address multiple problems instead of one. Expanding the limits of what is politically possible is the sine qua non of this work, the thing without which we will not succeed, the indispensable element in solving for pattern, the means and the end rolled into one.

The organizations supported in 2006 were chosen for their willingness to think beyond traditional approaches and for their ability to solve for pattern. Their intention is what sets them apart; they intend both to achieve concrete accomplishments in the short-term, and to change the political landscape in the long term. They are making progress, and, in the process, beginning to expand the limits of the possible.

GOAL I: Environment Program

The goal of the Environment Program is to facilitate environmental justice and environmentally sustainable communities by supporting the accountability of corporations, governments, and other institutions for their environmental practices.

OBJECTIVE I:
To facilitate the accountability of corporations, governments, and other institutions for their environmental practices.

Strategy 1:
To facilitate the development of public policies and other approaches by which corporations, governments and other institutions take responsibility for the real environmental costs and risks of their activities.

A grant was given in conjunction with Interprogram to the Carbon Disclosure Project (CDP), a project of Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, which is the single largest ever collaboration of institutional investors to survey companies on a corporate responsibility issue. The 2006 disclosure request was signed by 211 investors with $31 trillion in assets (over 30% of the world's invested assets; up from $21 trillion in 2005, and $10 trillion in 2004) concerning the greenhouse gas emissions from 1,900 of the largest companies in the world, almost four times the previous number of companies.

Through the Sustainable Governance Project, an initiative of Ceres, Inc., large institutional investors are organizing to influence corporate boards and top management to take action on global warming. With NCF support, over the last three years Ceres has hosted two UN investor summits, and has grown its investor group from eight institutions holding $600 billion in assets, to over 50 with nearly $3 trillion. These collective accomplishments have won substantial climate commitments from major companies, stimulating unprecedented investor action on an environmental issue, and shaping the public debate on the business and financial aspects of climate change.

The Global Warming Litigation Project, a collaboration between the Civil Society Institute (CSI) and the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) brings the power of State Attorneys General (AGs) to bear on the global warming problem with tort-based litigation. This litigation, which began with previous NCF support, goes directly after the private corporations responsible for global warming, seeking to change the economic calculation that now encourages them to foist the costs of climate change onto the public at-large. The case is now at a critical juncture; whether or not it proceeds is in the hands of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. If it does – and the State AG's believe it has a very good chance – the project staff will need to be well prepared to move on to the discovery phase and to prepare for what should be a very public airing of the facts.

In addition to the Environment and Interprograms, the Health Program joined in recommending the following four grants for renewal: The Partnership for Working Families (PWF), Front Range Economic Strategy Center (FRESC); Health Care
Without Harm (HCWH); and the Center for Labor & Community Research (CLCR).
PWF, which was launched with NCF support in 2003, consists of organizations around the country that are committed to shifting the logic of economic development decision-making at every level so that quality jobs, affordable housing, clean air and water, and other social outcomes become part of the purpose of development. Using the community benefits model pioneered by NCF’s California grantees and PWF, FRESC is working on specific taxpayer subsidized development projects. Like the other PWF partners, it has built a strong coalition of unions, community and environmental groups, congregations and individual community members. The partner groups have helped create tens of thousands of living wage jobs with health benefits for local residents, ensured significant low-income housing set-asides and won precedent-setting environmental protections.

HCWH is another of NCF’s grantees that has succeeded in changing corporate practices, working with the healthcare industry and care providers to reduce the use of harmful chemicals in everything from IV tubing to the food served in hospitals. It was given a Presidential Authority Grant at the end of 2005 to develop a strategy to expand its role in activating social-justice values in the larger public arena, using the organization's influence and network to elevate values of health and community and personal control over chemical trespass and corporate negligence. HCWH realizes that developing new long-term alliances around a community health and rights agenda opens the door to embracing an overarching vision of systemic change— one that can help satisfy broader goals of democracy and community.

The Illinois High Performance Manufacturing Initiative, a project of CLCR, had a very successful first year in 2005 thanks to NCF funding. The project, a joint effort of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association (IMA), the Illinois AFL-CIO and the Center, focuses on achieving long-term and sustainable benefits for manufacturers, workers, and the broader community. The Center has been vital in getting both the IMA, which represents some 4,300 Illinois manufacturing companies and has historically been seen in opposition to labor interests, to work with the AFL-CIO under the common vision of “High Road” innovation, increased productivity, along with health and environmental benefits for workers and communities.

A new grant was given for "Winning Chemical Safety and Hometown Security in New Jersey," a project of the Work Environment Council of New Jersey, Inc. (WEC). The nation's chemical industry is widely acknowledged to be at risk of catastrophic events triggered both by accidents and deliberate terrorist attacks. WEC's plan has the potential to be an important first step in transforming the chemical industry nationally through a transition to safer, healthier bio-based alternatives to many of the hazardous chemicals now processed in and transported through communities around the country.

Funding was also given to the National Environmental Trust (NET), which is a key piece of the defensive wall that has been built to hold back the federal administration's assault on environmental protections. NET has helped slow the campaigns to roll back the Endangered Species Act, opened hundreds of millions of acres of public land to mining operations, and embarrassed the government into releasing data on the toxic aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. NET is also working with high-profile leaders in states not known for environmental consciousness to make the case for resource protection, clean air and clean water.

Additionally, a Presidential Authority Grant was made at the end of 2005 to support Vassar College’s Institute for Innovation in Social Policy for the second year of a two-year project to establish social and cultural indicators as an important complement to traditional economic indicators like the GDP. The project involves the design, preparation, and dissemination of the following initiatives: The National Social Survey; The Social Health of the States; The Social Report; and Arts, Culture, and the Social Health of the Nation.

The Natural Capital Institute received renewal funding as a result of its highly successful operations in 2005 and early 2006. Over the past 12 months, NCI has worked behind the scenes with one of the world’s five largest corporations to develop and implement plans to “drive a race to the top” in terms of environmental sustainability. The company is moving towards 100 percent renewable energy; a zero-waste system; funding an investment banking operation to support sustainable technologies; and engaging over 6000 suppliers to join in these commitments. Moving into 2007, NCI will take what it has learned and make this information widely available to businesses interested in becoming more environmentally sustainable. It will also launch the world’s largest interactive directory of the one million-plus groups around the world NCI says constitutes a “sustainable civil society.” The directory will be linked to best-selling author (and NCI Director) Paul Hawken’s next book and a documentary film, both called “Blessed Unrest.”

Redefining Progress received a grant to continue its work to promote projects that simultaneously create economic growth and good jobs and foster greater environmental sustainability. RP works with a wide array of organizational partners, including national groups like the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Congressional Black Caucus, and regional groups like the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative undertaken by the Northeastern states. A Presidential Authority Grant (PAG) was given to the Ella Baker Center For Human Rights in California to support its work on A Green "Jump-Start" For Oakland in Transition. This grant will allow the Center to seize the opportunity presented by the election of a new Oakland mayor interested in advancing the Center’s agenda of creating green jobs where they are needed most. This will firmly link a high-profile African American mayor with policies that simultaneously promote environmental sustainability, economic growth and social justice.

Following the lead of the Health Program, grants were made to the Government Accountability Project, Inc. for Climate Science Watch, and to the University of Wisconsin, Madison for The Commons Project. Climate Science Watch will expose institutional censorship and abuses of climate science information, and provide expert analysis to government officials, the media and the public. The Commons Project will assist state government executives to develop innovative, coordinated "high road" policy programs that protect important public interests, including the environment and public health.

And in partnership with the Jewish Life and Values Program, a grant was given to the People for the American Way Foundation for the Center for American Values in Public Life. This grant is designed to help amplify religious voices concerned with environmental, social and economic justice. Like the complementary Strategic Values Project, the Center aims to deepen our understanding of the moral, cultural, and religious values that shape Americans’ views of the world, and to apply that understanding to the work of environmental sustainability and social justice.

Strategy 2:
To broaden public constituencies that will encourage corporations and other institutions to internalize the true environmental costs of their activities, by connecting environmentalists to public health, labor, religious, minority, economic development, science, business, youth, academic, social justice and other groups.

The Environment and Interprograms renewed support for the Apollo Alliance, an initiative of the Institute for America’s Future and its partner, the Center for Wisconsin Strategy (COWS), a project of the University of Wisconsin, Madison. The Alliance is Building a broad-based constituency in support of a sustainable and clean energy economy that will create millions of good jobs for the nation, reduce the country's dependence on foreign oil, and create cleaner and healthier communities. Officials from the President on down are now lining up to claim the Apollo message as their own. Having helped re-frame the debate (it's now jobs and the environment), Apollo is succeeding at putting real policies in place, creating real jobs, and developing a portfolio of concrete advances on energy, the economy, the environment, national security and community health. Groups including the United Steelworkers, Sierra Club and SEIU are all committing staff and resources to the effort.

Renewal support was also given by the Environment, Health and Interprograms for the related United Steelworkers and Sierra Club Strategic Alliance, a project of the Public Health Institute Inc., which is building on NCF's past support (including a PAG made late in 2005 to the Labor Institute) to create one of the most ambitious labor/environment (“Blue/Green”) alliances ever. These two organizations, the nation's largest private sector union and the largest U.S. environmental membership organization, respectively, are coming together behind a values-based movement for "Good Jobs, A Clean Environment, and a Safer World." Apollo provides remarkable breadth; Blue/Green should be able to go deeper, quicker; and each will benefit and learn from the other as well, going beyond Apollo's programmatic reach to deal with chemical security and international trade.

Renewal grants were also given by the Environment, Health and Interprograms, to the Strategic Values Project (SVP), an initiative of the Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, Inc., to continue the groundbreaking work of using social values research to develop strategic initiatives that advance environmental sustainability, community health and social justice perspectives and values. In 2006 the project focused on conducting additional basic research into the Constituencies of Opportunity (COOs) identified in the "Road Map" produced with a 2004 NCF grant. This will enable advocates to better understand the most promising COOs and how to engage them with initiatives based on shared American values. The Road Map is currently being used by organizations including the country's largest non-profit litigation firm, Earthjustice, the California Alliance of 25 social and economic justice organizations, the Center for American Progress and the Herndon Alliance on national health care reform.

The Environment and Health Programs gave renewal funding for the Western Organization of Resource Councils Education Project (WORCEP), which is bringing a wide and diverse swathe of people in the Rocky Mountain West together to effect environmental and social change, and has played an important role in changing the political landscape over time. It is also proven adept at navigating that new landscape and holding officials accountable to its values and to the interests of its members.

With enormous economic pressure being brought to bear in favor of environmentally damaging extractive industries and coal and nuclear power generation, Honor the Earth (a project of the Tides Center) is building support for alternatives. The group’s Energy Justice work, which was given a renewal grant, includes erecting demonstration wind turbines, educating the casino tribes about the benefits of investments in clean energy technologies, mobilizing grassroots power to influence Tribal decision-making and making the case for a transition away from the environmentally destructive but lucrative status quo, to a cleaner, more economically and environmentally sustainable model for the future.

TreePeople, a first-time core grantee, has inspired a growing audience of Angelenos with approaches that can simultaneously save billions of gallons of water, billions of taxpayer dollars and create a more livable city, all while putting job creation for low-income communities front and center. Supporters now include the region’s top leadership: the Mayor has pledged that one million trees will be planted on his watch and that new city construction will incorporate the environmental sustainability technologies demonstrated by TreePeople; and the County has turned over 2,700 acres of the San Fernando Valley to test these approaches.

In addition, a grant was given by the Environment, Health and Interprograms to the Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, Inc. (RPA) in support of New Rules for a New America: Government, Work and Preparedness in the 21st Century. This grant further supported the groundbreaking work being done by the Strategic Values team (last year through the Center for American Progress and this year through RPA). The development of strategic initiatives (another term for “solving for pattern”) is key to answering the question of how to expand the limits of the politically possible. Building on the success of the New Apollo Project, several new initiatives have emerged to address the environmental and social realities of post-Katrina America. Renewal support allowed these initiatives to be further tested and refined, disseminated through the media and developed and adopted by policy makers.

A grant was also given to the Film Arts Foundation to renew a PAG also made in 2006 to support Media Metrics, an application of the strategic values research to illuminate key questions about how media drives values in the culture. This project aims to give foundations, including NCF, a reliable set of approaches to creating social change through media, and a set of metrics to measure our progress over time. Finally, a PAG was given to renew support for the New York City Apollo Project of the Urban Justice Center. A smaller grant was made this year to help the Project implement a plan to reinvigorate its leadership and get back on track toward a more effective presence in New York.

OBJECTIVE II:

To facilitate environmental justice by ensuring that communities, especially those vulnerable due to low-to-moderate socioeconomic status, race, or ethnicity, are protected from environmental degradation.

Strategy 1:

To facilitate efforts which promote the environmental accountability of corporations, governments, and other institutions in communities, especially those vulnerable due to low- to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, or ethnicity.
A Presidential Authority Grant was made in late 2005 to support Built to Last, a project of the Center for American Progress (CAP), the initial phase in a long-term effort to develop values-driven strategic initiatives and communications to frame public debate in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. Facing post-Katrina questions about how tens of billions of reconstruction dollars will be spent, many in the social justice community are focusing on advancing existing single-issue policy proposals and opposing Federal efforts to cut civil rights, labor and environmental standards. Although this work is important, CAP, along with the Breakthrough Institute, aims to articulate a larger vision of what disasters mean in the life of the nation, how they impact patterns of structural inequality, and the important role of collective institutions in preserving social welfare. This project will connect the powerful Washington, D.C. policy work done at CAP to the Strategic Values Project’s analysis, to Gulf Coast community-based organizing. It will bring new voices and ideas to the debate over reconstruction and preparedness with a sharp focus on American values rather than laundry lists of issues and technical policy details.

A Presidential Authority Grant was also made at the beginning of 2006 to support the Strategic Analysis of Israel's Environmental Movement at Brown University’s Watson Institute by visiting professor Dr. Eilon Schwartz. With previous NCF support, the Heschel Center, which Dr. Schwartz founded and directs, has become a key leader of Israeli environmentalism. This grant will allow Dr. Schwartz the resources needed to participate with NCF’s U.S. grantees and to conduct research and analysis to be shared with the Foundation and grantees in the U.S. and Israel.

Another PAG was made to renew support for Alternatives for Community and Environment Inc. which does outstanding environmental justice work in Boston. The group has had a string of successes, including winning $40 million from the state for four new commuter rail stations serving low-income communities of color, $4 million to fund summer youth programs, and a statewide environmental justice policy. For similarly effective work on the west coast, a PAG was made to the Liberty Hill Foundation for its Environmental Justice Technical Assistance Program. This program has been a critical component of the long-term effort to build the strategic sophistication and impact of environmental justice organizing in Southern California.

Following the lead of the Health Program, grants were given along with Interprogram to the Institute for Sustainable Communities for their Mississippi Renewal Project, and to the Pesticide Action Network North America Regional Center for Californians for Pesticide Reform - Pesticide Drift Campaign. These projects have helped build the capacity of local organizations to implement strategies with state and national impacts. The Mississippi project begins with the insight that rebuilding on the Gulf Coast must begin by creating strong local governments. The pesticide work takes a principle health concern of farm workers and makes it a concern of middle class families.

Also in partnership with the Health and Interprograms, grants were awarded to Strategic Concepts in Organizing and Policy Education for its work with the California Alliance Tax and Fiscal Policies Project and to Alliance partner Working Partnerships USA.
These organizations are leading an effort by 17 groups throughout California to work with the NCF-funded Strategic Values Project to create long-term political change in the nation’s most populous state. They have built a track record in Los Angeles and San Jose (the nation’s second and tenth largest cities, respectively) that demonstrates that they have the skills and sophistication to make this work. They have led the way to expand the limits of the politically possible by helping to create a context in those cities in which elected officials promote policies of social, economic and environmental justice.

Finally, a grant was given in partnership with the Jewish Life and Values and Interprograms to the New Israel Fund to renew support for Women and the Environment: Agents of Change in Israel. This grant continues the work of integrating NCF’s U.S. and Israeli environmental programs. Over the past year NCF grantees and staff have been able to exchange ideas and share experiences between the two countries, to their mutual benefit.

Strategy 2:
To increase public access to information and decision-making about environmental policies.

A renewal grant was given by all five programs to support NOW on PBS, a project of the Educational Broadcasting Corporation, which produces some of the best journalism shown on television. NOW covers issues central to NCF's mission that are ignored or badly handled by much of the rest of the media, from global warming to the healthcare debate, and from government censorship to the increasing gap between rich and poor. Although there was some initial concern that the program would falter after the departure of Bill Moyers, David Broncaccio has proven himself an able successor and has even managed to increase the show's ratings so that it now reaches an influential audience of 2 million Americans every week.

The Arts, Health, Environment and Interprograms also renewed support for the Independent Media Institute, a.k.a. Alternet. Alternet has been consistently recognized as a key part of the infrastructure of social justice media. It reaches over 1.7 million Americans every month with issues and stories that are commonly missing from mainstream media accounts. Its articles are well researched and written so that they are passed along through social networks all over the country, creating an impact several times the size of the immediate web audience. The long-term strategy is to build countervailing force in a media environment dominated by corporations and right-wing ideologues. New technologies make this possible, and Alternet has done a good job of staying ahead of the trends to ensure that it remains fresh and relevant on constantly shifting terrain.

Following the lead of the Arts and Culture Program, renewal funding was given for WGBH Educational Foundation for its Frontline 2006 - Corporate Accountability, two documentaries that raised public awareness, sparked community dialogue and served as a catalyst for change. Now approaching its 23rd year on PBS, Frontline is a leader in producing compelling public affairs programming that makes a difference.
A Presidential Authority Grant was made, along with the Arts and Culture Program, to the National Building Museum to support The Green House: New Directions in Sustainable Architecture and Design, an exhibition that explores the field of green residential design as it reaches a turning point of greater acceptance by home builders and the general public. In residential architecture and design, "green" has come to mean cutting-edge, cost efficient and environmentally aware. The Green House presents an overview of this dynamic design movement to diverse audiences.

Groups supported here are leading a second wave of environmental justice organizing. They are as focused on solutions as they are on problems, and they are developing the skills necessary to enable hard-hit communities first to imagine, and then to realize, their own visions for the future. Two grants were awarded to organizations working in the South Bronx, Green Worker Inc. and Sustainable South Bronx. Green Worker is helping to develop a new model of worker ownership of environmentally sustainable industry, beginning with a pilot project in the environmentally devastated Hunts Point area. Sustainable South Bronx continues its award-winning and successful efforts to reclaim access to the waterfront for the community and to create sustainable jobs. In addition, a PAG was made to the Point Community Development Corporation, a South Bronx partner in the work of creating an environmentally and economically sustainable future for one of the nation’s hardest-hit communities. Finally, a grant was given to renew support for San Diego’s Environmental Health Coalition. The group joined the Electrical Workers Union in forming San Diego Apollo and forwarded a practical plan to replace an old, polluting power plant on the South Bay waterfront with alternative energy and green industries.

A set of PAGs was also made to renew NCF’s membership in grantmaking support organizations, including the Consultative Group on Biological Diversity, the Social Justice Infrastructure Funders, (through the New World Foundation) and the Environmental Grantmakers Association (through the Rockefeller Family Fund).

NEXT STEPS

When one of the world’s largest companies makes a serious commitment to environmental sustainability, the limits of the possible expand. When union rank and file and environmentalists end a 30-year stand-off to join forces, the limits of the possible expand. When we shift the focus from jobs versus the environment to economic growth through environmental investment, the limits of the possible expand. In the coming years, NCF will continue to support such endeavors, in order to foster a movement founded not on a mindset of limits and pessimism, but one that emerges from inspiration and hope.

Contemplative Practice Program

GOAL: Contemplative Practice
To promote the development and dissemination of contemplative practice programs – from all traditions – which address the foundation’s core values: concern for the poor, disadvantaged and underserved; empowerment of communities in need; respect for diversity; and promotion of understanding across cultures.

OBJECTIVE I:
To cultivate the development and teaching of contemplative practices linked to engagement with areas of concern to the foundation.

A renewal grant was given to the Marion Institute to support Phase II of the Contemplative Activism Project (formerly, the Contemplative Activism Mapping Project of the Public Interest Projects), to examine how faith, contemplative techniques that evolved within faiths, and their conjunction with new ways of doing social change work may help meet current and emerging environmental, social and economic challenges. At the core of this project is Albert Einstein's insight that "[t]he significant problems we face cannot be solved at the same level of thinking we were at when we created them." This project brings together the best thinking about the contribution Contemplative Practice has made to the work of social change, and makes connections to innovative work being done to develop more effective alternatives to traditional approaches, including the Strategic Values Project and MIT's work on innovation theory and practice.

Finally, a PAG was made to support Peace on the Street Inc., a “street meditation” program located in East Harlem. This excellent project introduces low-income people of color to contemplative practices with immediate benefits; youth are coming off their medications for ADD and asthma, and are learning to control their exchanges with the police and other youth. The project has recently begun a national outreach campaign, through a network of martial arts studios and public schools.

OBJECTIVE II:
To enable the teachers, practitioners and organizations devoted to contemplative practice to make their work available as a resource for non-profit organizations devoted to social, economic, and environmental justice.

Renewal funding was given to support the Vallecitos Mountain Refuge. The capacity building part of the grant allowed Vallecitos to continue building its new and innovative Continuing Education Program (CEP), mobilize a new Vallecitos Alumni Association, and conduct both board and staff training and development. Both the CEP and Alumni Association come out of a previous NCF grant to take the Vallecitos experience off the mountain. The Retreat for Leaders Working in Social Action and Contemplative Practice Field was a three-day retreat to build understanding and coordination amongst key leaders from both fields. Although it has been over 15 plus years since the founding of the contemplative practice field, this was the first meeting of such leaders, activists and practitioners, and allowed needed discussion and reflection.

Additionally, renewal funding was given to the Center for Contemplative Mind in Society Inc. to facilitate and expand the integration of contemplative practice and perspective into society. The Center is a key part of the eco-system of organizations working to promote the development and dissemination of contemplative practice programs across sectors and constituencies. It has been particularly attentive to the need to provide support to social justice activists and youth leaders, while also serving groups as disparate as corporate executives, attorneys and national environmental groups. This is an interesting moment for the Center and its allied organizations, as science is beginning to document the claims made for contemplative practice – that it can transform attitudes, awareness and approaches, and that practitioners can become more empathetic, cooperative and effective.

Finally, a grant was given to renew support for Spirit in Action, Inc., which trains social justice activists in contemplative practice techniques. The goal is to create a new generation of “spiritual activists,” people whose practice makes their work personally sustainable and more insightful.

Health Program

INTRODUCTION

Over the past five years, progress toward broad health reform on the federal level has been stalled. The number of uninsured and underinsured has grown while new studies confirm that our system of health care delivery, the most expensive in the world, does not perform as well as those of most other industrialized nations on a variety of health indicators and in reported patient experiences. Skyrocketing costs have put pressure on patients, increased consumer debt and inflated the price for publicly funded programs like Medicaid, making them an irresistible target for budget cuts. At the same time, the private sector has increasingly cut back or eliminated benefits for workers, while exploiting the growing regulatory vacuum to externalize the environmental costs of business activities.

Yet embracing an ideology that demands strictly market-driven private sector solutions to social problems, Washington came up with such solutions to the health care crisis as tax-free health savings accounts that many believe will simply undermine the existing market for health insurance, and the new Medicare drug benefit that funnels inflated profits to the insurance industry. Making matters worse, as the work of NCF grantees has shown, political considerations have increasingly come into play to limit the scope of national regulation on drug safety, toxic emissions and other public health concerns. Not surprisingly, health and environmental advocates have begun to look elsewhere for positive policy reform.

The grants awarded in 2006 were marked by a strong focus on state and local communities as vehicles for social change. Trailblazing states, including Maine, California, Massachusetts and Illinois among others, continue to experiment with different policy approaches in a quest to increase access to high quality health care at a reasonable cost, and to create healthy environments. NCF grantees worked to harness a pervasive sense among the public that the existing systems are broken and redirect it to support positive state and local solutions. Strategic alliances, creative policy development and long-term institution building all will remain critical to creating an environment in which the successes that are beginning to emerge from the states can be extended more broadly.

GOAL

The goal of the health program is to improve people’s health and well-being, especially those who confront barriers due to low-to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, ethnicity, or gender; recognizing the link between physical health and the economic, social, environmental, psychological, and spiritual factors that affect individuals, families, and communities.
OBJECTIVE I:
To assure access to quality health care, goods and services, especially for those who confront barriers due to low-to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, ethnicity, or gender.

Strategy 1:
To support efforts that reduce corporate, governmental, and other institutional practices that create barriers to quality health care, goods and services, especially those confronted by people as a result of their low-to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, ethnicity, or gender.

In 2006, the Health Program awarded a series of grants for work on the federal, regional and state levels to increase access to health care using a combination of strategies, including public education and outreach, community organizing, policy analysis and technical assistance.

On the federal level, efforts continued to fund tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans by slashing programs serving the poorest, including Medicaid and the federally-funded State Children’s Health Insurance Program (SCHIP). The Health Program, along with Interprogram, awarded renewal grants to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities and the Tax Policy Analysis and Communications Project of the National Women’s Law Center to educate the public and policy makers about the health access implications of tax cut and budget proposals as well as the interrelationship between health access, tax cuts, budget cuts, and proposals to block grant or privatize critical programs. The Health Program also gave a renewal grant to the Health Policy Action Project of the Pacific Institute for Community Organizations, a national network of faith-based community organizations that is engaging its leaders in children’s health issues in California and at the federal level, particularly in connection with the SCHIP renewal debate.

To protect health care coverage for low-income people under Medicaid and other public programs, the Health and Interprograms gave grants to organizations that have developed successful policy and litigation models that can be used in states across the country. The Sargent Shriver National Center on Poverty Law, whose Director of Advocacy was named the 2005 Child Health Advocate of the Year by the American Academy of Pediatrics, brought a landmark case protecting access to health care for low-income children in Illinois. The settlement of this litigation helped spark a broad reform initiative to provide health coverage for all children in that state and became a national model. The National Health Law Program protects court access for individuals who face the denial or curtailment of critical public benefits, particularly Medicaid. This group provided invaluable technical support to advocates across the country and developed high quality model dockets and practice guides. The Economic Justice Project of the William J. Brennan Center for Justice, Inc. (Brennan Center) received funding to provide legal and technical assistance to grassroots economic justice organizations that support and defend innovative policies to stop the erosion of wages and health benefits for low-income workers. The Brennan Center also received a Presidential Authority
Grant from the Arts, Health and Interprograms to continue its work to protect the First Amendment Rights of low-income legal services clients, medical clinics, museums, universities, foundations and other institutions that rely on government grants to finance essential work.

Even as Congressional leadership targeted publicly funded health programs for cuts to help balance the federal budget, NCF grantees continued to develop innovative approaches to increasing access in promising states. One important new example of this approach was the Herndon Alliance, a project of Northwest Health Law Advocates, which received a Health Program grant in April 2006. The Herndon Alliance grew from a NCF-supported conference of national and state health reform advocates in May 2005 that included such past and current NCF grantees as Community Catalyst, Families USA, Consumers for Affordable Health Care, the Center for American Progress, the Campaign for Better Health Care Fund, and USAction Fund. This group agreed to work together toward securing health care for all and began the hard work of reconsidering the traditional issue campaign approach to this goal. As its first major undertaking, the Alliance decided to use the analytic tools developed by NCF grantee the Strategic Values Project to create values-based approaches to building a majoritarian movement for health reform. The Herndon Alliance also received a Presidential Authority Grant to support a conference in September 2006 at which its initial research findings and analysis were presented to more than 150 partner groups.

The organizational members of the Herndon Alliance are among the country’s leading health reform advocates. One of its anchor groups, Consumers for Affordable Health Care (CAHC), has provided critical support to Maine’s experiment with universal coverage – the Dirigo Health Plan. The Health Program gave a renewal support to CAHC to continue its work to defend this national health reform model against attacks from ideological and industry advocates that object to its cost-containment measures. In November 2005, the Health Program also made a Presidential Authority Grant to CAHC to meet unanticipated legal and consultant costs arising from its extensive participation in administrative hearings on behalf of Maine’s consumers that secured an important ruling protecting Dirigo’s financing structure.

The Health Program also awarded a grant to another member of the Herndon Alliance, the National Council of La Raza (NCLR). Nearly one third of the Latino community is uninsured and roughly ten million Latinos are on Medicaid. NCLR, one of the largest Latino civil rights and advocacy organizations in the country, began to engage more deeply and directly on health care issues, both nationally and in state-based reform debates.

In 2006, Massachusetts enacted a sweeping – and controversial – new law that has as its goal universal health coverage for all people living in the Commonwealth. As the legislation was implemented, Health Care for All, Inc., which received a Presidential Authority Grant from the Health and Interprograms, and the Greater Boston Interfaith Sponsoring Committee, Inc., which received funding from the Health and Jewish Life and Values Programs, worked to make certain that the implementation of the law is not...
harmful to low and moderate income people and began a strong enrollment and outreach campaign to secure maximum benefits for the uninsured.

After a long process, a state health care task force in Illinois made a recommendation to the General Assembly and Governor for a health care access plan to be implemented by July 2007. The Health Program gave renewal support to the Campaign for Better Health Care Fund to work with its broad coalition of faith, provider, labor and other community-based partners to build public support for a plan that will provide universal coverage.

Florida consistently has one of the highest (and growing) rates of uninsurance in the nation, with roughly 3 million people uninsured and the third highest number of uninsured children in the country. At the same time, in FY06 the state realized an overall $6.8 billion surplus, including a $300 million surplus in its Medicaid program alone. As a bellwether state and among the first to experiment with Medicaid privatization, Florida will undoubtedly become a health reform model for the nation. The question is whether it will lead the way to a new era of funding cuts, reduced enrollments and poor benefits packages, or whether it will find better ways to deliver high quality care to its residents. The Health Program awarded a grant to Florida C.H.A.I.N., a project of the Human Services Coalition of Dade County, Inc., to build the advocacy capacity of state, regional and local communities in Florida to protect, and where possible increase, access to health care.

The Health Program, together with the Interprogram, also gave a renewal grant to the Arizona Project of the Interfaith Education Fund, Inc. (IEF), which has provided leadership and organizing training to churches and other local institutions in Arizona. Arizona is becoming an increasingly difficult environment for immigrant communities, which are a large part of IEF’s constituency in that state. This grant supported the project’s work to ensure that new rules requiring proof of citizenship to access many public services do not limit access to health care.

To ensure the sustainability of policy advances that increase health access, the Health Program supported projects that build committed public support and citizen participation. Together with the Jewish Life and Values and Interprograms, in 2006 the Health Program made a grant to Judson Memorial Church for the Jobs with Justice Faith In Action Project to develop a national model for engaging religious communities in issues of economic justice, including improving wages, benefits, and workplace health standards for low-wage workers.

Even as prescription drug prices continue to sharply rise, the pharmaceutical industry wields growing influence over the way public health care dollars are spent. Indeed, pharmaceutical industry-related advocacy groups spent a record $108.6 million on federal lobbying activities alone in 2003, hiring more than eight federal lobbyists for each member of the U.S. Senate. To address these rising costs and the influence of the pharmaceutical industry over government decision making, the Health and Interprograms awarded renewal funding to the Center for Public Integrity to produce in-depth investigative reports exposing the impact of the pharmaceutical industry lobbying on the availability and price of prescription drugs in the United States. Complementing this approach, the Health Program funded Prescription Policy Choices, which had received a small planning grant in 2005, to provide technical and other support to state policymakers evaluating the options for providing access to affordable medications for millions of Americans who lack prescription drug coverage. Community Catalyst, Inc. received funding from the Health and Interprograms for its Prescription Drug Consumer Advocacy Center (PDCAC), while the National Senior Citizens Law Center received a Presidential Authority Grant to educate policymakers and the public about the need for changes to Medicare Part D – the new prescription drug benefit for senior citizens -- in order to benefit consumers and minimize windfalls to pharmaceutical and insurance companies.

In partnership with the Arts and Interprograms, the Health Program awarded a renewal grant to the Future of Music Coalition, Inc. to continue providing information and assistance to musicians attempting to obtain health insurance while gathering data on a confidential basis about the obstacles they encounter. These programs also gave renewed support to Talking Eyes Media, Inc. for “Denied: The Crisis of America's Uninsured,” a documentary film that uses personal stories to illustrate the plight of the uninsured. This grant supported public screenings and town hall meetings to inspire people to engage in debate around the issues highlighted in the film. Health, along with the Environment and Interprograms, also made a renewal grant to Vassar College to support the second year of a two-year project to institutionalize social and cultural research indicators as a compliment to economic indicators. Its four specific initiatives will include the National Social Survey; The Social Health of the States; The Social Report; and Arts, Culture and the Social Health of the Nation.

The Health Program gave support to two projects that focus on health needs of specific constituencies. The first was to the Health Care for Health Care Workers project of the Paraprofessional Healthcare Institute, Inc., a multistate initiative that will increase access to health care for low-income aides and other health workers, while at the same time strengthening the long-term care workforce as baby boomers approach retirement. The second, granted with the Arts and Culture and Interprograms, is the National Artists' Insurance Initiative of Leveraging Investments in Creativity, to compile and disseminate information about quality health coverage to artists and support development of local models and best practices for serving this population.

When hospitals, pharmacies, managed care companies and insurers refuse to provide or pay for services to which they have religious objection, patients encounter a barrier to quality health care. To address this issue, the Health and Interprograms gave a renewal grant to the Health and Reproductive Rights Project of the National Women’s Law Center, which is working to ensure that religious restrictions placed on health care by provider institutions do not limit consumers’ ability to obtain information about, and gain access to, all treatment options. The Health Program also gave support to a new grantee, the Native American Community Board’s Indigenous Women’s Health Justice Program, to mobilize a national coalition of Native, women's, health and civil liberties organizations to improve access to high quality reproductive health care in Indian Health Services facilities for low income, reservation-based and/or rural Native American women.

Finally, along with Interprogram, the Health Program awarded a renewal grant to the Stem Cell Oversight and Accountability Project of The Foundation for Taxpayer and Consumer Rights. This project has forced improvements in the operations of California’s taxpayer-funded $3 billion stem cell research program to ensure public accountability. The project also advocates for public ownership of the medical advances resulting from this funding and recently convinced the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to reevaluate the validity of three core stem cell patents held by a Wisconsin foundation that has been accused of stifling U.S. research in the field.

The Health Program also awarded grants to two affinity groups – Grantmakers in Health and the Neighborhood Funders Group.

Strategy 2:

To support efforts that increase access to and enhance end-of-life care, especially for those who confront barriers due to low- to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, ethnicity, or gender.

The Health Program awarded a grant to the MergerWatch Project of Community Catalyst, Inc. to address the growing threat to patients' rights to self-determination from religiously-based restrictions on end-of-life care. Building broad state-based coalitions of end-of-life care experts, senior citizen's groups, health care advocates, reproductive rights groups and other stakeholders in three states, Mergerwatch and its partners work to promote policies and practices that protect patients' ability to obtain medical treatment and make health choices based on their own religious and ethical beliefs.

The Health Program also made a Presidential Authority Grant to the Center for Practical Bioethics to support a conference of key end-of-life care practitioners as well as leaders from religious, disability, academic, ethics, government and other groups from outside the field to evaluate the progress made over the last 10 years, identify remaining obstacles to increasing public support and acceptance of advance directives and other end-of-life planning methods, and map out a set of prioritized, achievable strategies for change.

OBJECTIVE II:

To assure that people, especially those that are vulnerable due to low-to moderate-socioeconomic status, race, or ethnicity, can grow-up, live, and work in a healthy environment and have access to products and food that have not been contaminated in ways that could undermine health.
Strategy 1:
To support efforts that address corporate and other institutional practices that have a negative impact on the physical health of workers, especially low-income workers.

Threats to occupational and community health and safety often go hand-in-hand with economic and social injustice. To address these issues, the Health and Interprograms made a Presidential Authority Grant to the Institute of Public Life to conduct an organizing, education and outreach campaign regarding serious health and safety problems in the Nebraska and Iowa meatpacking plants that employ large numbers of immigrant workers.

Approaching worker health from a different perspective is the Center for Labor & Community Research, which was given a renewal grant by the Health Program in collaboration with the Environmental and Interprograms for its Illinois High Performance Manufacturing Initiative. The Initiative is a partnership of the Illinois Manufacturers Association and the state AFL-CIO to develop “high-road” state economic strategies that will establish sustainable improvements in benefits and working conditions for workers while strengthening employers and the broader community. In its first year, the Initiative developed plans to build a public high-school based on high-road principles, launched the Chicago Manufacturing Renaissance, procured almost $1 million in funding for a new manufacturing sector "one-stop shop" that will operate on high-road principles and created a local initiative to assist the Workforce Investment Board assess, train, and place dislocated workers.

The Health and Environment Programs also gave renewed support to two additional grantees. The Western Organization of Resource Councils Education Project (WORCEP) works in Colorado, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, and Wyoming to develop a sustainable system that balances economic growth with the health of people and the stewardship of natural resources. WORCEP engages its 9,500 members, who include farmers, ranchers, small business owners, educators and other workers, to advance values of ecological concern, community health, economic justice and wise stewardship across a wide variety of issues. Health Care Without Harm (HCWH) is a professional membership organization that works with partners – including the American Nurses Association, the Breast Cancer Fund, Catholic Healthcare West, Kaiser Permanente and Environmental Defense – to elevate environmental health as a core value of healthcare by transforming the purchasing practices of the healthcare industry. HCWH has leveraged its strong relationships in the healthcare industry to stop the expansion of the medical waste incineration, moved the market away from mercury-containing products, and begun to shift the market away from PVC plastics, all of which pose serious health threats to health care workers, patients and communities.

In partnership with the Jewish Life and Values and Interprogram, the Health Program supported Interfaith Worker Justice to engage religious communities in campaigns to improve salaries, working conditions and healthcare for low-wage workers. These programs also gave a Presidential Authority Grant to Clergy and Laity United for Economic Justice (CLUE-CA), a newly formed alliance of California interfaith worker justice organizations who have come together to build a faith-based movement to win and protect living wages, health benefits and better working conditions for low-wage workers throughout the state.

The Health and Interprograms also made a Presidential Authority grant to the Factory of the Future Project, an initiative of Social Accountability International to improve working conditions in the apparel industry and create a healthier and more productive workforce that will help New York City garment factories become more viable in the global marketplace. This project will work with employers, workers and customers to recast New York's garment industry as a replicable model of high road business, creating better, safer and more stable jobs while improving business practices to help factories expand the range and quality of their services and differentiate themselves from low-road providers.

Strategy 2:

To support efforts to prevent and to reduce corporate and other institutional practices that have a negative impact on health because they degrade the environment of communities, especially low-income communities and communities of color, or contaminate products and food in ways that could be injurious to health.

Over the last few years, NCF grantees have been a central part of an important national movement to refocus local land use and economic development planning to include explicit consideration of community needs like healthy environments, access to health care, and good jobs with living wages and health benefits. Among the leaders in this emerging movement is the Partnership for Working Families (PWF), a national network of environmental and economic justice organizations that was given a renewal grant by the Health, Environment and Interprograms. PWF, established in 2002 by four California-based organizations, has grown into an effective and powerful network for sharing best practices and coordinating efforts as part of a nationwide campaign to ensure that local governments protect long-term community interests when making economic development decisions. These programs also gave a renewal grant to the Front Range Economic Strategy Center, a member of PWF, to hold governments and corporations in the Denver metropolitan area accountable for responsible community-centered development and the protection of health and welfare for low-income workers and their families.

In partnership with the Environment and Interprograms, the Health Program awarded funding to the Public Health Institute Inc.’s United Steelworkers & Sierra Club Strategic Alliance, a partnership between the United Steelworkers and the Sierra Club, which together represent 1.6 million dues paying members and their families. The alliance works to promote a positive vision for the future that links good jobs, good health and environmental protection. This project received an earlier Presidential Authority Grant to the Labor Institute, which initially focused on a communications and education strategy emphasizing chemical security issues to begin the process of building ties between environmental activists and chemical workers.
Two new grants by the Health, Environment and Interprograms went to projects that will build the capacity of government leadership on the state and local levels. The first, to the Commons Project at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, supports the project to provide Governors and other state executive officials with access to the technical expertise and other tools necessary to develop and refine more innovative policy programs in important areas of state concern, including health, the environment, economic development and public safety. The second, to the Institute for Sustainable Communities’ Gulf Coast Community Renewal Project, focused on local leadership. This project supported work with elected officials, community leaders and others in Moss Point, Mississippi -- one of the poorest Katrina-affected cities on the Mississippi coast -- to develop a sustainable plan for economic development and recovery after the storm that will support community environmental health and become a model for the region.

Also growing out of NCF’s post-Katrina strategy was a grant made by the Health, Environment and Interprograms to Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, Inc. to support New Rules for a New America: Government, Work and Preparedness in the 21st Century. The project uses the social values analysis created by NCF grantee the Strategic Values Forum in order to develop and test strategic initiatives as a long-term response to the environmental health effects and economic devastation from Hurricane Katrina. That analysis also contributes to the Tax and Fiscal Policies Project of Strategic Concepts in Organizing and Policy Education (SCOPE), which uses social values research to address issues of social and economic justice in California. Along with Working Partnerships USA (WPUSA) and the Environmental Health Coalition, which also received support in 2006, SCOPE is building a progressive state-wide alliance of organizations representing key issue sectors, including health, environmental and labor groups, as well as strategic geographic regions of the state. SCOPE also received an earlier Presidential Authority Grant to support training and technical support to member organizations of the alliance that will anchor and build coalitions in four critical regions of the state.

The Health Program gave renewal funding to two other California-based grantees. The Center on Policy Initiatives, a San Diego-based leader in the accountable development, or “community benefits” movement, uses a combination of grassroots leadership development, public education, coalition building and research to win social and economic justice for poor communities, including greater access to health care and to cleaner, healthier environments. The Pesticide Action Network North America Regional Center’s Californians for Pesticide Reform - Pesticide Drift Campaign, which received a Presidential Authority Grant from the Health, Environment and Interprograms, has formed a statewide multi-organizational initiative aimed at protecting the health of farm workers, fence-line communities and the general public by eliminating significant sources of airborne pesticides that contribute to air pollution associated with acute and chronic health problems.

In addition, the Health and Environment Programs made a grant to the Climate Science Watch project of the Government Accountability Project (GAP). This is a new project that grew out of GAP’s work, funded by NCF, representing whistleblowers who exposed oil industry influence on government climate change policy. This project will continue to hold public officials accountable for how they use climate change research in policymaking, with the goal of translating research into effective action to respond to this urgent environmental health challenge.

Finally, the Health Program supported several media projects, all of which satisfy access and worker health guidelines as well as the community environmental health guideline. All programs gave renewal funding to two PBS programs that provide in-depth coverage of stories often overlooked by mainstream press. The first, to the WGBH Educational Foundation, is for Frontline – a leading public affairs program that has informed public debate on a diverse range of topics for the last 22 years. The second grant was for the Educational Broadcasting Corporation’s NOW on PBS program, which has increased its audience to 2 million viewers, harnessing an audience for stories on topics including global warming, economic justice, government censorship, and the health care debate. In addition, the Health, Arts, Environmental and Interprograms made a grant to the Independent Media Institute for Alternet -- an award winning on-line daily news magazine whose mission is to inspire citizen action on issues including the environment, health care, technology and cultural trends, policy debate, human rights and civil liberties, social justice and media issues.

NEXT STEPS:
We will continue to look for strategic investments on the state level that will cultivate new experiments and help “tip” existing ones to create positive change. We also will follow the increasingly interesting Herndon Alliance, which in September 2006 presented its nascent work with the social values research commissioned and supported by NCF over the last several years to a large audience of health care advocates from across the country. The material was challenging and controversial, but the ensuing discussion has engaged the imaginations of many of the nation’s most seasoned and effective advocates. The coming months and years will determine whether and how this material will be used to bring about change and which organizations will be poised to lead the effort. We will help facilitate this process and work with other funders to ensure the broadest support possible.

Jewish Life and Values Program

Introduction

A cord of three strands is not quickly broken.
– Ecclesiastes 4:12

Our 2006 grants reflect the increasing synergies and networks emerging among our grantees as the field of Jewish service and social justice grows. The Foundation seeks not only play an instrumental role in growing these fields, but also to serve as a powerful advocate for these kinds of partnerships and the emerging networks that make for more effective and transformational work.

This year also reflects a greater conceptual integration of our funding in the States and Israel, with a variety of projects that link the work of our American and Israeli grantees. A pilot program with the Rockwood Leadership Program, for example, is introducing Jewish and Arab social change leaders in Israel to this powerful leadership training model. This integration is further reflected in the creation of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Israeli Arab Issues, a project that links NCF’s work in Israel with its relationships among funders in the States. Even the work to amplify progressive religious voices in America echoes in subtle but powerful ways the challenges of cultivating progressive Orthodox voices in Israel.

While our efforts to advance Jewish service and social justice, the peace process, and social change in Israel are very much mid-stream – thriving, bearing fruit, and building upon their recent successes – there are also several initiatives this year that are reflective of new approaches. The cultivation of new Jewish emergent communities and the amplification of progressive religious voices in America, for example, are strategies that after an initial period of exploration were just this year actualized.

GOAL: Jewish Life and Values

To extend the presence and influence of the values of tolerance, social justice (tzedek), loving kindness (chesed), mutual respect, and ethical behavior within the Jewish world both to enhance Jewish life and the assist in the promotion of a more just society.

OBJECTIVE I:
To promote a leadership and organizational culture within key Jewish institutions that reflects these values.

Strategies 1 & 2:
To promote social change by supporting cohorts of activists and leaders from key organizations and to continue the work of cultivating leaders whose work and values reflect those core principles that the Foundation holds dear.

The Jewish Life and Values (JLV) Program has continued to support programs that nurture and develop the next generations of Jewish leaders committed to service and social change. Over the past two and a half years, the Nathan Cummings Foundation has brought the Rockwood Leadership Program to the Jewish community through pilot programs to train and network young Jewish social justice activists. With the successful completion of a second pilot, we are more convinced than ever that this is a powerful program that is beginning to build a Jewish social change movement, that will result in inter-organizational collaborations and transform the Jewish community. We therefore gave a grant to the Rockwood Leadership Program for Leadership Training for Generations of Jewish Social Justice Activists. This grant was for a third-stage pilot and purposely structured to test additional dimensions such as trainings for long-time Jewish activists and bridging generations. It also helped build momentum while we prepare to transition from pilots to a sustained program built on the strongest models tested.

We made a second grant to the Rockwood Leadership Program for Leadership Training for Social Change Leaders in Israel to explore the possibility of “bringing Rockwood to Israel.” This grant was for the important first step – assessing feasibility – and brought a few key Jewish and Arab Israeli social change leaders to the States to experience Rockwood as part of a general Art of Leadership training. The possibility of meeting a real need in Israel with a program that brings great synergy between the Foundation’s work in the States and Israel made this a particularly exciting pilot.

We have continued to increase the opportunities for leadership training in social change available to rabbinic students. We renewed our grant to the Jewish Council on Urban Affairs (JCUA) for the Rabbinical Student Fellowship, an intensive summer program through which a cohort of rabbinical students gain hands-on experiences in social justice work in a Jewish context. Over the past two years the Foundation has been at the forefront of supporting several pilot programs to train rabbinic students in different models of social change to challenge them to integrate activism into their rabbinates. JCUA's program, having completed its second year, is part of this cluster of programs.

We also gave a general support grant for another cohort-based program, Reboot, Inc. Reboot continued to expand its innovative experiment to meaningfully engage culturally influential young Jews, with the aim of jump-starting an innovative, nationwide conversation about Jewish identity and community.

Finally, we renewed our membership to the Jewish Funders Network (JFN). JFN continues to create networks of philanthropists who are taking leadership roles in the Jewish community.

OBJECTIVE II:

To promote a Jewish spirituality and practice that reflects these values.

Strategy 2:

To support community organizations that are developing spirituality and influencing religious thought and communal culture.

Throughout 2006 the JLV Program sought ways to convene and network new spiritual communities, formed primarily by and for Jews in their 20s and 30s, that have recently emerged. These communities are new not only by virtue of their length of time on the scene, but also because they offer new models of leadership and religious community. Hundreds of Jews, many young and many unaffiliated, are flocking to be part of these “non-synagogues.” These communities, in a myriad of ways, are finding new and compelling ways to integrate spirituality, learning, and activism, and the Foundation has sought the best venue through which to bring together the leadership of these communities – to create a network of practitioners, offer support as they take risks, and learn from this emerging phenomenon. It is in this context that we gave a grant to both Kehilat Hadar for an Independent Minyan (Jewish prayer group) Conference and to Synagogue 3000 (S3K) for the Jewish Emergent Initiative. The Independent Minyan Conference was the first official gathering of founders and leaders of new independent Shabbat morning minyanim and represented one important subset of these new Jewish communities. S3K has been convening “Jewish Emergents” more broadly – emergent Jewish leaders who are committed to building transformative spiritual communities unbound by conventional expectations about what a synagogue is "suppose" to be. As an organization with a strong research orientation, S3K understands that a critical aspect of innovation is supporting multiple experiments and learning from failures as well as the successes. Furthermore, the way in which S3K frames this work within a broader context of synagogue change means that the learning has the potential to naturally flow back to mainstream synagogues.

We gave a Presidential Authority Grant (PAG) to IKAR, an innovative and justice-oriented spiritual community, and a leader among this network of Jewish Emergents. IKAR implemented the strategic plan we supported in 2005 and continued to build a solid infrastructure so that it is not only a dynamic hub in Los Angeles, but also can exert influence and mentor other communities to create new models of Jewish community, spirituality, and justice.

We also made several second-year grant payments in 2006 to a variety of Jewish spirituality projects reported in the 2005 Annual Report. The Pardes Spiritual Education Initiative, a project of the American Pardes Foundation, Inc., is a program that gives Jewish college students a way to experience a deeper connection between their spiritual lives and Judaism. The Yedidya Center for Jewish Spiritual Direction, sponsored by the Shefa Fund, is an organized effort to cultivate and disseminate the practice of Jewish Spiritual Direction, a one-on-one contemplative counseling practice, in the American Jewish community. The Institute for Jewish Spirituality is impacting Jewish life by providing powerful educational frameworks for Jewish leaders that teach – in a sustained, retreat-based cohort model – a curriculum that integrates a range of Jewish spiritual practices, texts, and ideas. Lastly, Researching the Long-term Impact of Synagogue Change Initiatives, a project of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, is the first rigorous social science investigation into synagogue change programs and their ongoing impact.

OBJECTIVE III:

To promote these values by strengthening the capacity of Jews and the Jewish community to engage with major issues of social and economic justice and stewardship of the earth

Strategy 1:

To build a constituency for Jewish social justice work through supporting programs which provide experiential service learning opportunities infused with Jewish learning.

The Foundation has been one of the founding funders of the Jewish Coalition for Service (JCS), a fast-growing coalition of more than 50 organizations engaging Jews in service and social change. The field of Jewish service is reaching a tipping point and is poised to enter the mainstream, with a readiness to scale up. JCS is uniquely poised to play an important role in building the field. Our general support enable JCS to play a role in making service and activism a more central part of contemporary American Jewish life and to take on a larger role in conducting planning and providing central leadership and facilitation for the field of Jewish service.

Several JCS affiliate organizations were also included on our 2006 docket. We gave a grant to Camp Isabella Freedman of Conn, Inc. for Adamah and Support for Organizational Merger. Adamah provides an authentic and holistic service learning experience that incorporates Jewish and environmental learning, influencing its young participants to become informed and committed environmentalists. This is a program that truly integrates activism and spirituality on the ground and cultivates a coming generation of engaged leaders. Our grant also included support for Isabella Freedman as it merged with Elat Chayyim, one of North America's preeminent retreat centers for Jewish spirituality. Additionally, we gave grants to PANIM: The Institute For Jewish Leadership and Values, Inc. (PANIM) for the Jewish Civics Initiative and to the Jewish Organizing Initiative (JOI). Both JOI and PANIM provide meaningful, year-long experiences for young Jews that combine Jewish learning, social justice, and leadership development. The grant to PANIM allowed it to significantly expand the scope of its Jewish Civics Initiative, which includes a class-based Jewish Civics curriculum, a four-day leadership seminar in Washington, and the creation – by teens – of social change projects in their local communities. Our grant to JOI, a one-year fellowship for young Jewish adults in community organizing, enabled the organization to implement its recent strategic plan to build sustainability, expand its local funding base, and develop a membership-based alumni outreach program. Lastly, we gave a PAG to the Foundation for Jewish Campus Life for Tzedek Hillel to engage Jewish college students in community service and activism. With the Foundation’s support and encouragement, Tzedek Hillel has grown its capacity considerably over the past years and the relative position and prominence of Tzedek work within Hillel has increased significantly.

Strategy 2:
To support and provide capacity building assistance to Jewish social justice organizations that mobilize and organize Jews in communities throughout the country around issues of social, economic and environmental justice.

We made a grant – together with Interprogram – to the Jewish Funds for Justice, Inc. (JFSJ) for Synagogue Organizing & Katrina Reconstruction and Redevelopment Fund. More congregations are joining Congregation-based Community Organizing (CBCO) networks as a way to engage in systemic social change while strengthening the fabric of the community, and more and more rabbinic students are joining trainings, classes, and internships in this arena. JFSJ's CBCO program, in close collaboration with several other NCF grantees, is building the field of synagogue organizing on the national level, as well as working with Jewish seminaries to educate rabbinical students in the principles and practices of CBCO. As has been noted in the past, CBCO advances all four of the JLV objectives – leadership, spirituality, social change, and interfaith collaborations. Through the second project of this grant, the Hurricane Katrina Recovery and Redevelopment Fund, JFSJ made strategic grants and loans for both community development and community organizing, focused on the Delta's low-income communities.
addition to providing necessary support for ongoing redevelopment, the Katrina Fund has helped focus the attention of the Jewish community on the low-income victims of Hurricane Katrina while creating an ongoing Jewish response to the injustices left in its wake. Also in the area of CBCO work, we gave the second-year grant payment to the Union for Reform Judaism for the Just Congregations Initiative. Just Congregations is working to strategically engage, train, and link Reform congregations to the tools of CBCO, focusing on developing congregations, strengthening leadership through relationship building, and engaging in systemic social change as part of a broader interfaith effort. Working closely with our other CBCO grantees, Just Congregations represents a significant leap in our efforts to advance CBCO in the Jewish community.

We made grants to two other long-standing, effective, and trusted partners mobilizing the Jewish community to pursue justice and training Jewish activists: the Union for Reform Judaism for the Religious Action Center (RAC) and the Progressive Jewish Alliance (PJA). While the RAC works on the national level and PJA on the state-wide and local level, both are real partners in the work to create a more socially and economically just society and play central roles in representing the Jewish community in interfaith coalitions. Both are also key partners in advancing the work of other NCF grantees. The RAC is a key partner for the Just Congregations Initiative, Center for American Values in Public Life, and Coalition on the Environment and Jewish Life. PJA’s leadership is increasingly being called to serve as mentors to other local Jewish social justice organizations and works in close collaboration with many NCF grantees including the Jewish FundS for Justice, Clergy and Laity Unity for Economic Justice, American Jewish World Service, Jews United For Justice, and IKAR.

We also made two grants to organizations working at the national level to engage the Jewish community in two critical issues of the day. We gave a PAG – together with Interprogram – for general support to Shomrey Mishpat Rabbis for Human Rights/North America (RHR-NA) to bring Jewish attention to issues of human rights in America. RHR-NA identified torture as the first critical issue around which they would mobilize, and our support made possible the inaugural rabbinic conference on Judaism and Human Rights. The RHR-NA approach is focused on developing and sustaining a group of Jewish clergy who function as dedicated human rights educators and advocates; the organization seeks to empower rabbis to articulate a strong moral voice in response to critical issues of justice and to mobilize their communities for action. We also gave a PAG to the Jewish Council for Public Affairs for the COEJL Strategic Planning Process. COEJL – the Coalition on the Environment in Jewish Life – has played an important role in promoting environmentalism in the Jewish community and is now in the process of determining the most effective direction for the new millennium.

We also renewed our support for the New Israel Fund (NIF) for our newly launched funding strategy in Israel – Women and the Environment: Agents of Change in Israel. As part of this strategy, the Foundation entered into partnerships with the New Israel Fund, the Dafna Israeli Fund, and the Green Environment Fund. Even given the challenges of the summer’s war, this new approach to our work in Israel is off to a very strong start. Thoughtful, exciting grants were made and valuable steps were taken to further the effectiveness and sustainability of these funding partnerships. (See Appendix A for the funding strategies and a list of the projects supported in Israel in 2006.)
Additionally, in light of the crisis in Israel last summer of 2006, the Jewish Life and Values Program – together with the Executive Committee of the Foundation – made a PAG to the New Israel Fund for 2006 Emergency Campaign. This grant supported the NIF Emergency Pool, which focused on economic assistance, trauma and post-trauma support, and coexistence initiatives. As in past crises, we also sought to offer support to our grantees – organizations advancing women as agents of social change and building the Environmental movement – most hard hit by the war.

Another important development in our work to create a more just and vibrant Israel was the newly formed Inter-Agency Task Force on Israeli Arab Issues (Task Force), a project of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Inc. The Task Force has been an unprecedented development, engaging scores of mainstream Jewish organizations in issues the Foundation has long recognized as critical. This is a unique opportunity for the work and strategies of NCF and a few of our peer foundations to reach entirely new audiences of American Jews and in turn organizations – both in America and Israel – that can influence Israel's approach to Arab-Israelis. In light of the events of the summer of 2006, issues of Arab-Israeli civic equality are being recognized as all the more critical to Israel’s future.

Strategy 3:
To promote Jewish involvement in interfaith efforts to address issues of social justice through partnership with Interprogram.

We joined Interprogram in giving a PAG to the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) for Academic Boycotts. The grant was to support a conference at which 18 academics from around the world would begin to develop a consensus on why academic boycotts are intrinsically a violation of academic freedom. This initiative grew out of the AAUP’s response to Association of University Teachers' decision in the spring of 2005 to impose an academic boycott against two Israeli universities. At that time the AAUP issued a series of statements condemning the boycott as inimical to the values and practices of academic freedom and planned a conference to further develop and disseminate a policy about the inappropriateness of academic boycotts when measured against the standards of academic freedom and to promote an open discourse. For a host of reasons, the conference was in the end cancelled, and what remained of grant funds was used to produce a special issue of Academe, the AAUP bulletin.

We also joined Arts, Environment, Health, and Interprogram in giving two grants in media to raise public awareness, spark community dialogue, and serve as a catalyst for meaningful change. A grant to Educational Broadcasting Corporation, for NOW on PBS to support investigative journalism and to WGBH Educational Foundation for Frontline 2006 - Corporate Accountability to support two documentaries helped to profile important and often under-reported issues and elevate debates facing American democracy. In particular, NOW on PBS was interested in highlighting some of the broader moral values underlying key issues and the role of religious communities and leaders in amplifying those values.
OBJECTIVE IV:
To promote communication, understanding and partnerships between Jews and peoples of other faith traditions through programs that focus on shared values and common goals.

Strategy 1:
To promote interfaith coalitions around issues of social and economic justice, which include people of all faiths and backgrounds.

2006 marked our entry into the work of amplifying and mobilizing a broad progressive religious voice in America. Indeed, more than ever we are in need of interfaith coalitions and religious communities to demonstrate moral leadership and prioritize and pursue social and economic justice. Together with the Health Program and Interprogram we gave a PAG to Clergy and Laity United for Economic Justice (CLUE), a newly formed alliance of California interfaith worker justice organizations that have come together to build a faith-based movement to win and protect living wages and health benefits for low-wage workers throughout the state. We also together with Health and Interprogram renewed support to Judson Memorial Church for Jobs with Justice Faith in Action Project to increase the participation and effectiveness of faith-based communities within NYC’s social change movement and to deepen and increase Jobs with Justice work with communities of faith across the country. Additionally, we joined the Health Program in supporting the Greater Boston Interfaith Organization Sponsoring Committee, Inc. (GBIO) for the Massachusetts Health Care Reform Implementation Project to ensure that implementation of the recently-enacted health reform law in Massachusetts will serve the needs of low and moderate income residents of the state. This grant grew out of a strong collaboration between GBIO and the Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Boston, a key grantee in the area of CBCO work and a partner in MA healthcare reform. On the national level, we made a second-year grant payment to the National Interfaith Committee for Worker Justice (IWJ) for Low-wage Worker Initiatives that are engaging religious communities in improving wages, benefits, and workplace standards in the hotel, janitor, and laundry industries. CLUE, New York Jobs with Justice, GBIO, and IWJ are all promising models of interfaith coalitions that successfully provide a moral framework and engage religious communities in social and economic justice.

In 2006, the JLV Program also undertook a scan of an emerging field loosely referred to as “progressive religious voices.” As a result of these findings and a preliminary assessment of where the Foundation could have the greatest impact, we made a cluster of grants aimed to build this emerging field. The Faith in Public Life Resource Center, a project of Center for American Progress, has an explicit mission to coordinate, cultivate, and improve the efforts of diverse faith leaders and organizations pursuing justice and the common good. These efforts are laying groundwork and building valuable infrastructure that will benefit the larger progressive faith community in the years ahead. Auburn Media, a project of Auburn Theological Seminary, also provides resources to the progressive faith community through rigorous media trainings and promotion to increase the presence of responsible, effective, and compelling religious leaders in public discussion. We believe this project has the potential to increase authentic and alternative religious perspectives in the media and raise the level of informed public discourse. Our renewal for the Center for American Values in Public Life, a project of the People for the American Way Foundation, developed important research and statistical muscle for the growing progressive... faith community. Their newly launched report, the American Values Survey, is a critical tool in understanding the moral, cultural, and religious values that underlie Americans' commitments and behaviors.

Lastly, we – together with Interprogram – gave a grant to the Interfaith Youth Core (IFYC) for the Colleges and Universities Program. IFYC is committed to penetrating the consciousness of religious communities and advancing the centrality of pluralism and community service to the religious identity of young people. IFYC is working to inculcate the culture of institutions where diverse religious young people interact – in this case universities – by providing experiences that demonstrate the shared values between faiths and positive inter-religious cooperation. It is also of note that IFYC's Executive Director, Dr. Eboo Patel, has been playing an increasingly high-profile role as a visionary and articulate exponent of religious pluralism and an emerging interfaith youth movement.

Strategy 2:

To promote the peace process in Israel

We have continued our multi-pronged approach to promote the peace process in Israel, with projects that range from high-level policy to grassroots activism and from campus education to teenage digital media. The OneVoice Campus Education Program of the PeaceWorks Network Foundation brings consensus-building programs and moderate, positive dialogue around the Middle East conflict to American college campuses, providing an important alternative to often polarized campus climates. Through campus programs, students hear grassroots voices that value consensus and a shared future from both the Israeli and Palestinian perspectives. The Israel Policy Forum (IPF) engages policy makers and strategists advocating for active US engagement toward a two-state solution in order to provide greater security and stability for the future of the entire Middle East. Our grant has enabled IPF to continue to expand its influence and scale, advance positions that urgently need to be heard, and develop effective strategies to ensure that America does all that it can to wisely broker peace. With our support to Brit Tzedek v'Shalom Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace (BTVS) local chapters and grassroots leadership has been engaged to actively shape the conversation about peace in Israel through Building Up a Grassroots Jewish Voice in Pursuit of Peace. Through providing media trainings and strategic resources, BTVS has helped fill the need for a strong, sophisticated, and trained grassroots Jewish voice advocating for a negotiated two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Based on a very different grassroots approach, our second-year grant payment to Ishmael and Isaac has been enabling this new organization to create strong, cooperative relationships between members of the Jewish and Palestinian American communities in the U.S., which in turn can promote peace between the people of Israel and the Palestinian Authority. We also joined the Arts Program to support Temple University for Tyler School of Arts – Community Arts Program (CAP@Tyler) and Link Media, Inc.’s Chat the Planet Israel. CAP@Tyler – a program that combines artistic disciplines with skills and knowledge in community organizing – produced a community-based work, Migrations & Hyphenations – Parallel and Converging Arts Explorations in Arab American and Jewish-American Communities. Lastly, Chat the Planet is bridging American, Israeli, and Palestinian youths through filmed dialogue, documentary, and digital conversation that stimulate meaningful discussion, global thinking, and steps towards change.
NEXT STEPS

As we continue to advance our core strategies, we also look forward to the findings of Visioning Justice and the American Jewish Community, an unprecedented and intensive inquiry into the field of Jewish social justice. It is our hope that this 18 month investigation into how to engage Jews, Jewish communities, Jewish institutions, and Jewish resources more and more effectively in social and economic justice will break new ground and offer some new strategic directions to the Foundation, our grantees, funding colleagues, and the broader field. As Visioning Justice moves toward completion, we anticipate exciting ways to help move the field of Jewish social justice to the next level of maturity and impact.

WOMEN AND THE ENVIRONMENT: AGENTS OF CHANGE IN ISRAEL
GRANTS* 2006

NCF/NIF Women’s Initiative Grants

Goal:
To harness the energies of women as agents of change to advance the rights and improve the status of disempowered populations – including women – to create a more just and vibrant Israeli society.

Strategies:
Support and cultivate initiatives in the Orthodox Jewish and Arab-Israeli sectors – both cultures deeply rooted in tradition in which women are making meaningful change – that empower and mobilize women for effective social change through:

1. Leadership: Enhance the leadership capacities of women and develop effective contexts through which they can lead;

2. Advocacy: Protect and extend the rights of women; and

3. Collaborations and Cross-Sector Initiatives: Cultivate and advance efforts that cross populations and bring together unlikely partners to address common concerns, share knowledge and expertise, and engage in coordinated strategies.

Criteria/Preferences:
We also seek to support organizations, projects, or initiatives that:

• address the role of men in achieving these goals;
• effectively engage younger generations;
• work across generational lines; and
• seek to educate the public, change community understanding, and galvanize the media.

Adva Center
Women’s Budget Forum

To prepare a gender-based analysis of the state budget and changes thereto, to reveal the impacts on women. The Israel Women's Network partnered with Adva on this project, as agents for its dissemination upon completion. Kolech, Kayan, and Women Against Violence are also all members of the coalition and promoted specific issues to their constituencies. This project looked at women in general with a focus on special populations, including Orthodox and Arab women.

* Please note that given our grant cycle these are actually grants given beginning December 2005.
Economic Empowerment for Women

Micro-lending Program

To provide financing to women to start and operate small businesses. Economic Empowerment for Women (EEW) works to reduce the social and economic gaps in Israel through economic empowerment of low-income women. The diverse participants in their economic empowerment courses include 27% Arab Israelis, 10% Ultra Orthodox from B’nei Brak and Haifa, and 3% immigrants. Additionally, 60% of the course participants are mixed Mizrahi, religious women, and immigrants who speak Hebrew. In the loan project, 70% of the loans were provided to Arab women. Project funding enabled the hiring of additional staff to process loan applications, allowing the organization for the first time to distribute all available loan funds.

Kolech: the Religious Women’s Forum

General Support

To improve the status of religious women by promoting fundamental reforms through a consensual process of change from within the Orthodox community. Kolech supports settings in which women are able to conduct richer spiritual lives; advocates revising the halakhic (Jewish legal) status of women by emphasizing their standing in the rabbinical courts; supports egalitarian educational frameworks; and works to increase the number of women political leaders in the religious community. Kolech, a national organization with local groups, also publishes a monthly journal; holds workshops and seminars; advocates in religious courts on problems of sexual harassment in education; and addresses issues relating to agunot.

Ma’an: The Forum of Bedouin Women’s Organizations

General Support

To support programs in the Negev advancing Bedouin women’s leadership, developing cooperation among local organizations of Bedouin women, and promoting activities aimed at the Bedouin community at large to advance the status of Bedouin women.

Ne’emanei Torah V’Avodah

General Support and Young Leadership Program

To create the Young Leadership Program, which aims to develop an alternative to the existing rabbinical leadership. The group, which includes both right-wingers (some of them settlers) and those with more moderate political views, was created to further diverse issues in Orthodox society (such as the status of women, the rights of agunot and those denied a divorce, and involvement in the field of social justice). The project support enabled them to promote these issues through presenting conferences and lectures across the country, writing articles for the press, and appearing in the media. They also expanded on core activities such as promoting liberal themes within the Orthodox community to benefit women in areas of divorce and marriage and advance women’s roles in religious life. Core funding supported the group’s PR activities and its broad promotion of the above issues throughout the Orthodox population.
Realistic Religious Zionism

General Support

To support Realistic Religious Zionism – an organization founded by Orthodox men and women opposed to the present image of Religious Zionism and seeking to change its priorities. They have been vocal advocates among Orthodox communities for giving up control of the territories and opening up Religious Zionists to discussion of issues of the status of women in halakha (Jewish law), of social justice, and of the tensions between halakha and modernity. Central strategies included a public campaign of advertisements, vigils and demonstrations, petitions, conferences and days of study, and distribution of educational materials.

Sidre

Bedouin Women’s Community Center and General Support

To improve the status of Bedouin women in the Negev on the individual and socioeconomic levels. Sidre has served as a catalyst for the creation of activity centers for women, which serve as the loci for the organization’s wide range of empowerment programs for women. General support funded the operation and programming at the centers including lectures, reading and writing courses, and local activities initiated by the women in each village. The additional project support enabled a group of graduates of the organization's women's empowerment program to open a new women's club for Bedouin women in the unrecognized villages.

Women Against Violence

Women’s Rights Project

To promote civil equality for Arab women in Israel giving them representation in decision-making forums in both the public and political. Central project strategies included advocacy, developing political leadership among women, and identifying opportunities to work with men’s organizations to advance the project goals.

Working Group for Equality in Personal Status Issues

General Support

To support the Working Group for Equality in Personal Status Issues. The Working Group is a coalition (including the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, Kayan, the Israel Women’s Network, Women Against Violence, and the Altufula Center - Nazareth) works to promote the rights of Arab Israeli women by securing enforcement of current law (e.g., giving Arab women rights equal to Jews to take divorce alimony custody issues to family courts rather than religious courts); by improving women's treatment in religious courts; by advocating for increased budgets to add court services for women; by strengthening legislation (e.g., raising legal age for marriage from 17 to 18 to allow Arab girls to finish high school); and by building general public awareness of Arab women's issues through lectures, workshops, publications, and media outreach.
Dafna Israeli Fund (DIF)

Guidelines:
The Dafna Israeli Fund (DIF) complements the work of the NCF/NIF Women's Initiative as it seeks to develop feminist leadership by supporting new initiatives in three fields: academia, business, and public participation. Projects of the Dafna Israeli Fund seek to:

All projects include serious inter-organizational partnerships between feminist and mainstream institutions and focus on mentoring, networking, and diversity as key to developing feminist leadership.

Program to Increase Women’s Participation on Local Councils
Joint Project of Isha L’Isha and Local Municipalities
To work with local forums (and ultimately the Union of Local Authorities) to foster women's participation in local councils. The ultimate goal of this program is to increase the number of women, including women from marginalized communities, who are members of local councils throughout Israel. In order to achieve this long-term goal, this initiative educates and empowers groups of women to become active in local politics and works with the local councils to make them more receptive to including women.

Women Renewing Management
Joint Project Kol Ha-Isha (Women’s Voice) and Shatil: The Empowerment and Training Center for Social Change Organizations

In the long run, Ir Amim seeks to influence Israeli policy such that it enables both peoples to reach an agreement about the future of the city, rather than creating irreversible facts on the ground, which preclude future reconciliation. In addition to its ongoing legal and media work, Ir Amim’s Jerusalem Policy will identify and educate key decision makers and implementers of policy about the situation on the ground and the ramifications of current and proposed policy on this situation.
Interprogram Initiatives for Social and Economic Justice

INTRODUCTION

2006 marked the fourth year of the Nathan Cummings Foundation’s Interprogram Initiatives for Social and Economic Justice. Interprogram operates in partnership with the Foundation’s four core program areas to augment their potential impact through collaboration. The Interprogram guidelines have provided a mechanism for strengthening the intersections between all the Foundation’s program areas, making possible multi-disciplinary approaches to address challenges in a coherent, strategic and integrated way.

In 2006, Interprogram participated in 67 programmatic grants and 15 affinity and membership grants. Of the 67 programmatic grants, 43 grants were made by Interprogram and one other program area; 21 grants were made by Interprogram and 2 other program areas; 1 grant was made with Interprogram and 3 other program areas; and 2 grants were made by Interprogram with all the four other programs.

Interprogram supported fifteen affinity and organizational membership grants. Five of these organizations have the potential to address relevant issues at the national level such as foundation payout requirements, excise tax, the estate tax, nonprofit governance and accountability. These include: BoardSource, the Council on Foundations, Inc., the Foundation Center, Independent Sector, and the National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy. The Foundation also participates in regional forums, conferences and events sponsored by the New York Regional Association of Grantmakers and the Nonprofit Coordinating Committee of New York, Inc. Seven of the affinity grants - Association of Black Foundation Executives, Inc., Third Sector New England, Inc. / Resource Generation, Tides Center / Social Venture Network, Women & Philanthropy, Inc., Hispanics in Philanthropy, Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, and Neighborhood Funders Group - were made to organizations in which staff members, Trustees and Associates actively participate on Boards and committees. These cohorts address issues relevant to specific communities or fields of interest within the nonprofit world.

In addition to the above, a Presidential Authority Grant was made to Demos to provide co-sponsorship funding for a dinner in honor of Charles Halpern, the Nathan Cummings Foundation’s founding president. NCF has had a long-time ongoing relationship with Demos that began during Charles Halpern's tenure here. In the late 1990's, he brought together a group of people concerned about the divide between public policy and debate. These conversations resulted in the founding of Demos (Charlie served as the first Chair of the Demos Board). Our sponsorship of this event was made in honor of Charlie's lasting achievements, both at Demos and NCF, on the occasion of his stepping down from the Demos Board.

GOAL
To support social and economic justice, in order to encourage equitable and sustainable development that promotes democracy; as well as community, cultural, social, spiritual and individual wellbeing. Interprogram will advance this goal by supporting the exploration, development, and implementation of public policy, private efforts, and activities for institutional and systemic changes.

OBJECTIVE I:
To establish the accountability of economic, social or governmental institutions, especially corporations, for the consequences and effects of their activities on the environment, and on people, their health, wellbeing, cultures, and communities.

OBJECTIVE II:
To address these social, political, economic, environmental, cultural or health issues in an integrated way by:

- bringing together groups—often separated by narrow issue interests and by race, religion, gender, class, ethnicity, and national origin—into crosscutting constituencies based on common economic, social, and ethical concerns; and
- creating both the possibilities and the demand for development of more systematic solutions to these issues, as well as the social basis needed for their implementation.

ACHIEVING INTERPROGRAM’S GOALS AND OBJECTIVES:

All Interprogram’s grantmaking, as stipulated in the Foundation’s guidelines, must be in support of organizations that are working to make corporations, governments or other institutions more accountable for the effects their actions have on the environment, people, and their health, wellbeing, culture, and communities. Listed below are the 2006 Interprogram grantees in a table that divides them under its three main funding rubrics: Accountability of Corporations and Other Institutions, Government Accountability, and organizations that are working on issues of both Corporate and Government Accountability. Also included is a section, which lists Interprogram’s continued support to help address, in an integrated way, the social, economic, environmental justice, environmental sustainability, health, and development issues of the Gulf Coast rebuilding effort.

NEXT STEPS

In 2007, Interprogram hopes to continue to encourage stronger collaboration between the other core programs. Interprogram will seek to find more opportunities for partnerships in particular to develop strategic initiatives that incorporate strategic values approaches. It is also hoped that the Foundation, through Interprogram, can continue to cooperate on a larger Katrina/Gulf rebuilding effort, develop more synergistic media projects and approaches that foster social change, and work to develop more strategic alliances (such as Apollo) that will impact public policy.

2. Proxy Votes, 2006

3. Press Coverage of NCF Shareholder Activities, Selected Articles
The Board approved the Foundation’s Shareholder Activities Guidelines in April of 2002. Since the approval of the new guidelines, the Foundation has been increasingly active – voting proxies, filing shareholder resolutions and working in collaboration with both institutional investors and corporations to address issues lying at the intersection of the Foundation’s program areas and long-term shareholder value.

This is the fifth annual report on the Foundation’s shareholder activities. The Foundation’s activities have increased substantially in terms of both scope and impact since its initial involvement in the area in 2002:

- We have built a powerful network of relationships with other institutional investors in order to leverage our impact. Although NCF is often the smallest member of these coalitions in terms of asset size, we are frequently called upon to play leadership roles in working groups and on steering committees.

- Collaborative efforts where we serve on steering or advisory committees include: the Investor Network on Climate Risk, the Carbon Disclosure Project, several ICCR working groups and the Principles For Responsible Investment facilitated by the UN Environmental Program and the UN Global Compact. The total assets backing these collaborative efforts range in size from $1.5 billion to $31 trillion.

- The Foundation was actively involved in 13 shareholder resolutions in 2006, serving as lead filer for 9 shareholder resolutions and providing assistance to other filers for another 4 resolutions. All of these related to environmental issues, primarily climate change.

- Four of these resolutions were withdrawn because of significant commitments by the companies to address the issues raised. Seven others received votes ranging from 5.5% to 39.25% (the highest vote to-date on a climate change related resolution), all more than sufficient to qualify for resubmission. The resolution receiving 39.25% at Standard Pacific Corporation was among the top 5 social resolutions of the 2006 proxy season in terms of supporting vote.

This report will describe in more detail our shareholder activities in 2006, including collaborations with other institutional investors, shareholder resolutions and engagements with corporations, presentations to other foundations and endowments and our proxy voting.

Collaborations with Major Asset Owners

Investor Network on Climate Risk (INCR)

The Investor Network on Climate Risk was launched in 2003 with the goal of educating investors about the business implications of climate change. NCF was a co-convener of the first Summit and subsequently joined the INCR. In 2004 we were asked to join the Steering Committee of the INCR because of our shareholder work on climate change.
Ceres, an NCF grantee, acts as the Secretariat for the INCR, which now has more than 50 members with over $3 trillion in assets. At its last biennial meeting in 2005, 28 European and US-based investors announced a 10-point call to action calling on US companies, Wall Street firms and the Securities and Exchange Commission to intensify efforts to provide investors with comprehensive analysis and disclosure about the financial risks associated with climate change.

Members of the INCR often work collaboratively to file shareholder resolutions on climate change and energy efficiency. This work is coordinated by Ceres and the Interfaith Center of Corporate Responsibility through various sector working groups, including an Oil & Gas Working Group and an Energy Efficiency/Buildings Working Group. INCR members actively filing shareholder resolutions through this collaboration include public pension, labor and religious funds and other responsible investors.

Oil & Gas Working Group
In 2006 NCF filed two resolutions at oil and gas companies requesting that they report on their plans to respond to increasing pressure to reduce GHG emissions. The resolution submitted to Vintage Petroleum did not come to a vote as the company was acquired by Occidental Petroleum shortly before its annual meeting. The other resolution, submitted to Ultra Petroleum, received support from both Institutional Shareholder Services and Proxy Governance and garnered 22.3% of the vote.

NCF also continued its participation in a dialogue with Apache Corporation led by Boston Common Asset Management. Through this dialogue, shareholders have been able to move the company away from its stance as a climate skeptic and towards concrete action to address climate change. The company now discloses its operational emissions intensity, participates in voluntary greenhouse gas emission reduction initiatives and exercises “carbon diligence” in its business planning processes.

Energy Efficiency/Buildings Working Group
In 2005 NCF organized a new working group to address the GHG emissions and energy usage of companies in the homebuilding and real estate industries. Following a relatively successful first year, the resolution was revised in 2006 to focus exclusively on energy efficiency while the working group’s focus was expanded to include big box retailers.

The working group was extremely successful in 2006, especially for what is still such a new focus area. Investors joining the Foundation in filing energy efficiency resolutions in 2006 included the Sierra Club Mutual Funds and the Vermont State Treasurer’s Office. The group was able to secure support for the majority of its resolutions from proxy advisory firms Institutional Shareholder Services (ISS) and Proxy Governance (PGI), leading to high levels of support for a number of the resolutions. A resolution submitted to Standard Pacific, a homebuilder, received the support of 39.25% of the shares voted, while a resolution filed at Bed Bath & Beyond received approximately 26% of the vote.

The Foundation plans to expand upon its work in this area in 2007.
Additional Comments on Collaboration through the INCR

NCF’s relatively small portfolio of domestic stocks and staffing/time constraints limit its ability to file resolutions. However, working with coalitions of other INCR members allows us to magnify our impact. While we are one of the smaller members of the INCR, we bring research and analytic capabilities that can be leveraged over a broader investor group and larger pool of assets.

As indicated above, NCF plays a key role in the INCR’s resolution-based work. The Foundation’s Manager of Shareholder Activities serves on the Organizing Committee and is the Sector Working Group Coordinator for the Energy Efficiency/Buildings Working Group. She is also active in the Investor Outreach Working Group and the Oil & Gas Working Group.

Carbon Disclosure Project (CDP)

CDP is a wonderful example of how our program strategies and shareholder collaborations are sometimes well-aligned and work in support of each other.

CDP provides a coordinating secretariat for institutional investor collaboration on climate change. CDP’s aim is twofold: to inform investors of the significant risks and opportunities presented by climate change; and to inform company management of the serious concerns of their shareholders regarding the impact of climate change on shareholder value.

Following its launch in December of 2000, CDP has invited institutional investors to collectively sign a single global request for disclosure of relevant information regarding greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions. In doing so it has created 4 of the largest ever collaborations of institutional investment capital – $4.5 trillion, $10.2 trillion, $21 trillion, and now $31.5 trillion of assets under management.

The information requests have historically been sent to the 500 largest global companies (the FT500) but in 2006 CDP expanded and the information request was sent to more than 2,100 companies globally, of which 940 answered the questions.

The project has created:
- The largest registry of corporate greenhouse gas emissions data in the world.
- A world-leading and up-to-date information repository for the investment community, facilitating superior equity and debt investment decision-making.
- Shareholder support for corporations to measure and manage the impacts of climate change.
- Investor leadership supporting the work of other stakeholders engaging corporations of the issue of climate change.
- A process applauded by investors such as Henri de Castries of AXA and Sir John Bond of HSBC, business leaders such as Jeff Immelt, CEO of GE, and politicians such as Tony Blair.
Collaborations like CDP and the INCR, while separate, reinforce each other to raise awareness with investors, companies and the investment community.

The Foundation’s Director of Shareholder Activities is on the CDP Advisory Board.

United Nations Principles For Responsible Investment

The PRI grew out of a growing view among investment professionals that environmental, social and governance (ESG) issues can affect the performance of investment portfolios. These issues, however, are not yet being adequately incorporated into investment decision-making and ownership practices. To address this failing, the United Nations Secretary-General invited a group of the world’s largest institutional investors to join a process to develop the Principles for Responsible Investment. Individuals representing 20 investment organizations with $1.7 trillion in assets from 12 countries agreed to participate in the Investor Group. A stakeholder group of 60 experts was formed to support the Investor Group. The stakeholder group included international representatives from the investment industry, non-governmental organizations, academia, research institutions, policy makers and government.

The set of principles that arose out of this process are voluntary and aspirational. They are not prescriptive, but instead provide a menu of possible options for incorporating ESG issues into mainstream investment decision-making and ownership practices.

The Principles for Responsible Investment were publicly launched in April 2006 in a ceremony at the New York Stock Exchange with Kofi Anon ringing the opening bell. Over $4 trillion endorsed the Principles at the launch; additional signatories brought the total to over $5 trillion at the end of 2006.

Lance Lindblom attended the opening ceremony on behalf of the Foundation. NCF was a founding member of the UN PRI and one of a select group of organizations invited to participate in the 20 member Investor Group. Caroline Williams, the Foundation’s Director of Shareholder Activities, currently represents NCF on the Board of the PRI.

Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility (ICCR)

ICCR was the first collaborative shareholder organization NCF joined. While its core membership is comprised of religious organizations, associate members include pension and labor funds and socially-responsible investment funds. As with the INCR, ICCR’s shareholder resolution activities are organized through working groups. The Foundation’s Manager of Shareholder Activities is actively involved in the Global Warming Working Group and its interactions with the INCR. Other working groups that NCF participates in include: Health, Environmental Justice and Water. While we are not currently filing resolutions in all of these areas, participation in the groups helps to keeps us apprised of developing issues.
Ceres Stakeholder Teams
In 2006, the Foundation’s Manager of Shareholder Activities was invited to join the Sunoco Stakeholder Team. Ceres organizes dedicated stakeholder teams for each major company or cluster of companies, based on the mutual preferences of companies and stakeholders. These stakeholder teams, which now mobilize close to 100 coalition members and peer companies, are charged with the annual report review function, as well as providing ongoing engagement with the company for discussion of priority or emerging issues, future plans for reporting or particular stakeholder engagement challenges.
Conferences and Meetings with Other Foundations

The Foundation’s President and the Director of Shareholder Activities are frequently asked to speak about proxy voting at conferences or to meet with the Boards and/or Investment Committees of other foundations. In 2006 these activities included:

Conferences
• Green Mountain Summit on Investor Responsibility. Lance Lindblom participated in a roundtable discussion on corporate dialogue, shareholder resolutions and proxy voting. The roundtable was part of a 2 day summit on investor responsibility.

Meetings with Foundations on Proxy Voting and Shareholder Resolutions
• Park Foundation – Board. Caroline Williams, Director of Shareholder Activities, made a second presentation to the Board to follow up on meetings held in 2005.

• Lemelson Foundation – Board. Caroline Williams made a presentation to the Board on the topic of proxy voting and shareholder resolutions. This was part of a day-long Board meeting on various approaches to socially responsible investing.

• Skoll Foundation – Group Representing 20 Northern California Foundations. Lance Lindblom, along with the President of Ceres, spoke to the CFOs and CIOs of the foundations present about proactive investment policies and practices.
